FROM WASHINGTON.

Rencontre between the Hon. George Taylor and C. C. Walden—Lord Napier's Transfer—The Case of Judge Irwin, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Jan. 21.

A recontre occurred in the vestibule of the House of Representatives to-day, between the Hon. GEORGE TAYLOR and C. C. WALDEN of New-York. WALDEN was formerly Deputy Collector under SCHELL, and was removed through TAYLOR'S influence. Passing the latter to-day, in company with Lieutenant MEADE, he uttered the words, "You d—d rascal!" TAYLOR, stepping up to WALDEN, inquired if the expression was applied to him. Receiving an affirmative answer, he struck WALDEN instantly with his fist, but the blow took only slight effect, in consequence of MEADE'S throwing up his arm. WALDEN returned the blow with his umbrella, which TAYLOR wrenched from his hand, and nearly knocked WALDEN down with it. Bystanders interposing, prevented any further collision. Rumors of a challenge from WALDEN are rife, but it is not deemed probable that TAYLOR will take further notice of the affair.

It is reported in diplomatic circles that Lord NAPIER, in fact, is very much pleased with his anticipated transfer to the Hague, being fully apprised that it is designed as a step to promotion to Berlin.

The rumor is that Lord N. is to be intrusted at the Hague with the negotiation of a marriage alliance between one of the Princes of Orange and the Princess ALICE—a mission of such delicacy, of course, and one that is esteemed to be highly honorable to the negotiator.

This disposed of, Lord BLOOMFIELD is expected to retire from Berlin, to be succeeded by Lord NAPIER. The Berlin mission has long ranked in much higher grade than that to the United States, but it is particularly desirable to a British representative since the marriage of the Princess Royal and her residence at that Court.

The House Judiciary Committee examined several witnesses in the case of Judge IRWIN of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen of the highest respectability testified to facts which, it is believed, will make his impeachment unavoidable.

THE NEW TERRITORY.

Interesting Communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 11, 1859.

DEAR SIR: Will you be pleased to give me all the information in your possession in relation to the Territory now proposed to be organized out of the western parts of Kansas and Nebraska, on the Platte River. I wish particularly to be informed as to the number of the inhabitants—the character of the country and its productions, or suitableness for agricultural purposes as well as mineral resources. Also, the tribes of Indians occupying it, their names and numbers as far as you are informed, and all other information you may have pertinent to the object of my inquiry.

Yours, truly,
ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

Gov. J. W. DENVER, Washington, D. C.

COMMISSIONER DENVER'S REPLY.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, Jan. 18, 1859.

SIR: In reply to your note of the 11th inst., asking for information in relation to "The Territory now proposed to be organized out of the western parts of Kansas and Nebraska," I beg leave to state that, not having seen a copy of the bill, and, therefore, being uninformed as to the extent of the proposed new Territory, I will assume that the eastern boundary is to be the 103d degree of longitude west from Greenwich; the northern line to be the 43d degree of north latitude; the western line the eastern rim of the Great Salt Lake Basin, and the southern line to be the northern line of the Territory of New-Mexico. This will include a part of Utah, as well as parts of Kansas and Nebraska. Nearly the whole of this country, extending six degrees from north to south, and eight from east to west, may properly be termed mountainous. The Rocky Mountain chain passes through its entire length from north to south, forming a curve to the east, from which branch out numerous spurs, which in themselves form considerable chains. The most important of these are the Black Hills, there being several ranges so called. Some of the highest peaks in the United States are found in these ranges, among which are Pike's, Long's, Laramie's and Fremont's. Amid these mountain ranges are some fine valleys, among which the most remarkable, perhaps, are the three Parks, which are in fact three extensive valleys, surrounded by the very crests of the Rocky Mountains, where are found the sources of some of our most noted rivers. The North Fork of the Platte has its source in the North Park, the Grand River of the West in the Middle Park, and the South Fork of the Platte and the Arkansas rivers rise in the South Park. Green River has its source in the Wind River Mountain, flows south, and forming a junction with Grand River, is afterwards called Rio Colorado, which empties into the Pacific Ocean through the Gulf of California. The Sweetwater, one of the principal tributaries of the North Fork of the Platte, also rises in the Wind Mountains, but flows east.

Until within the year just passed there were no white inhabitants in this country, except a few traders and trappers. The principal trading posts were Bent's Fort on the Arkansas, St. Vrain's Fort on the waters of the south fork of the Platte and Bridger's Fort on the west of Green River. Laramie, once a trading post, was some years since converted into a military establishment, and the same has recently been done with Fort Bridger. Within five or six years quite a large settlement was made in the vicinity of Fort Bridger, by the Mormons, but not long since they abandoned it. Last year the discovery of gold mines on the head waters of the South Platte induced quite a large number of persons to go out there, a good many of whom remained during the Winter, while probably the larger number returned to their homes intending to go back again in the Spring. The number Wintering there has been variously estimated at from five hundred to a thousand, and those who intend going out in the Spring will number many thousands.

As I have before stated, the general character of the country is mountainous, to which the Spanish word Montana would apply very appropriately. It is not, and never can be, an agricultural country. The fertile land comprises a very small portion of the whole, and even where that is found, it can be made productive only to a limited extent. While at Fort Laramie, in 1850, I was informed by the officers of the Army who had been stationed there, that nearly all their crops had been destroyed by hail-storms, which visited the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains every year with terrific violence. Aside from this, however, the great altitude of the country would prevent the cultivation of products other than such as are common to high latitudes.

Herds of buffalo frequent the plains along the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains, but none have ever been found farther to the westward. Indeed, there is scarcely any evidence that the buffalo ever crossed that rocky barrier. Their range seems to have been confined almost exclusively to the great Valley of the Mississippi.

The mineral resources have been but very partially developed, but there is no doubt of the existence of gold in considerable quantities over a large extent of country. As far as my knowledge extends, the discoveries of gold have thus far been confined to the eastern slope of the mountains, the principal working of the mines having been on the head waters of the South Platte. It has been found also, as I am informed, on the North Platte, and on the Arkansas, above Bent's Fort. There can be but little doubt, however, from the geological structure of the country, that the western slope will be found richer than the eastern, and that such will be found to be the character of the mineral deposits southward for some distance into New-Mexico, where the silver and copper take the place of the gold.

In this connection it may be well to direct your attention to the importance of providing rules and regulations for the government of the mines. At this time there is scarcely any nation on the globe with mines of the precious metals so extensive as ours, and yet, strange to say, Congress has passed no laws in relation to them, nor has it as yet been decided whether Congress has a right to sell or otherwise dispose of the mines. The laws of Spain and Mexico recognise the mines of precious metals as a part of the eminent domain which belongs to the sovereignty, and cannot be alienated. The common law of England agrees with this rule in every particular. In the celebrated case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan et al., (3d Howard Supreme Court Reports,) the Supreme Court decided that Congress could not interfere with the eminent domain, even in a Territory, but could hold it in trust only for the future State. If this be so with regard to the Territories, the argument would seem to apply with much greater force to the States of the Union. The sovereignty of the State governments, within their respective States is undoubted, and the right of eminent domain can belong only to the sovereign power. In several of the States and in all of the Territories, the Federal Government is a great land-owner—nothing more. Her lands are exempt from taxation by agreement with the States, but in nothing else does she occupy a different position with regard to the rights of ownership, or with regard to the rights of eminent domain, from that of any other landed proprietor. She may exercise acts of ownership over her property, but cannot interfere with the eminent domain—with the sovereignty.

Thus far Congress has in no instance acted in contravention of this principle, nor have many of the States asserted their right to the mines of precious metals found within their borders, though some of them have done so, as for instance New-York and Pennsylvania. The settlement of these questions is of the greatest importance to the mining interests of the country, and no correct settlement is likely to be had unless they are thoroughly understood.

However this question may be decided with regard to the States, there can be no doubt but Congress may, even as trustee for the future State, adopt such rules and regulations for the management of the mines in the Territories as may be deemed necessary, and the sooner this is done the better. One thing and only one seems to have been determined on, and that is, that the mines shall be left free for all to work without paying a rental to the Government. This was certainly a wise and liberal policy, and one that should not now be departed from. The laws fo Spain, which were adopted entire by Mexico, constitute the most complete mining code in the world, but they provide that a portion of the proceeds of the mines shall be paid over to the Government. After changing them in that particular they might then be adopted with advantage for the government of our own mines. They are equitable and just, and while they fully protect the mining interests, none of the other great interests of the country are neglected. The land may be sold but the minerals are reserved by operation of law as a part of the eminent domain. Any one may enter the land of another and work a mine, but before doing so he must pay the owner the agricultural or grazing value for so much of the land as may be necessary for carrying on the business. Thus it will be seen that the rights of all are protected.

Of the Indians found within the proposed territory, I believe none of them have settled or permanent habitations, but are purely nomadic in their habits. Their numbers are not known with any degree of certainty, but they consist of various tribes known as Camanches, Kiorrays, Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Crows, Sioux, Shoshones or Snakes, and Utahs. My opinion is, that the proper course for the Government to pursue towards these Indians would be to assign to them a small reservation, furnish them with an instructor, and the means of cultivating the soil, and then require them to support themselves. If they have settled habitations, give them the lands they occupy, but in no instance to give them money annuities or other presents, except such as may be necessary to carry on their farming or agricultural operations. Every one must admit that the system heretofore pursued toward the Indians has proved a most lamentable failure. Taking them as a mass they are not as well off to-day as they were half a century ago, notwithstanding more than fifty million of dollars have been expended by the Government in efforts to civilize, to say nothing about the expenditures and exertions of other parties. Instead of civilizing, it has converted much the larger portion of them into paupers, who rely on the small sum of money paid to each once or twice a year for subsistence, and which generally draws around them some of the very worst of the whites.

Naturally disinclined to labor, they rely on the Government for support, and thus we have gone on year after year, building up a vast pauper establishment without conferring any corresponding benefit. Our presents attract the cupidity of the whites, and the Indian having got rid of his share, sits down and listlessly ekes out a miserable existence until the next payment is made, when the same thing is done over again. Thus there seems to be no likelihood of a termination of this pauper system, but with the extinction of the whole race. Some change is necessary in order to stay their downward course, and in my opinion the first step to be taken is to teach them to labor. This can only be done by making their subsistence depend on their own exertions. I know of no reason why the Government should be required to support the Indians in idleness, while the whites are compelled to labor for a livelihood. At all events, our present system can hardly be changed for the worse, unless it should be determined to increase the money annuities.

In my judgment, the proposed Territory ought to be organized with about the boundaries I have indicated. Although, as stated, its agricultural resources must always be limited, yet the mines will attract a great number of people, and their remoteness from any organized government will force them to adopt an organization for themselves, as was once done in Oregon. This should not be. The benefits of government ought to be brought within the reach of all.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
J. W. DENVER, Commissioner.

The Thorndike Will Case.

BOSTON, Friday, Jan. 21.

The will of the late AUGUSTUS THORNDIKE, contested by his son-in-law, Lieut. MARIN, of the Navy, was before the Judge of Probate, to-day, for a hearing. The Hon. B. F. THOMAS and JAMES L. ENGLISH appeared for the Will; B. R. CURTIS and RUFUS CHOATE for the contestant. The main question is one of jurisdiction.

G. W. PHILLIPS and WM. N. DAVIS, two of the subscribing witnesses, testified that the will was signed in the office of Mr. DAVIS on the 14th of September, 1858; the deceased being then of sound mind; he arrived from Europe in the steamer Arago, in June, 1858, and immediately took rooms at the Tremont House, in Boston, where he died in November; Mr. CHAS. THORNDIKE, one of his sons, was here, but most of his immediate family were in Europe; his family consisted of a wife, two sons and two daughters, one unmarried.

WM. H. GARDINER testified that he had known Mr. THORNDIKE from boyhood; was in College with him had the management of his property here while Mr. THORNDIKE was in Europe; nearly all his property, real and personal, was in Boston; in June, 1857, Mr. THORNDIKE began to write a series of letters to Mr. GARDINER about returning to Boston, to end his days; was anxious to have a suitable house for his family; he would either hire, buy or build; the financial convulsion of the ensuing season caused him to postpone his return; his library, pictures and wines were stored in Boston; Mr. CURTIS put in the report of the case in the Supreme Judicial Court, in which it was decided, that Mr. THORNDIKE was not in May, 1837, an inhabitant of the city of Boston. Under that decision the city paid back $301 taxes to Mr. THORNDIKE.

OLIVER REED, Tax Collector, testified that he collected a tax of Mr. THORNDIKE, in Newport, R. I., for 1848. He was taxed on $9,000 real estate, and $50,000 personal property. Mr. THORNDIKE had furniture stored in Newport a year ago last Spring. Mr. THORNDIKE'S house in Newport was sold, after his daughter was married to Lieut. MARIN. That made some talk in the street.

EBENEZER GROOKER, of Newport, testified in relation to collecting taxes of Mr. THORNDIKE in 1846. He thought he was taxed too high, the assessment being made upon one thousand dollars. Witness told him it ought to have been two hundred thousand dollars.

Governor GIBBS, of Rhode Island, testified that he knew Mr. THORNDIKE intimately at Newport. After the marriage of his daughter with Lieutenant MARIN he broke up his establishment, and, in speaking of going to Europe, declared his intention not to return again to America.

The case was here postponed till Friday of next week.

ANTI-RENT CASES.—The Albany Atlas and Argus, of Friday, says: "One of these cases—the decision of which will dispose of 200 to 300 pending actions—is now on argument in the Court of Appeals. The case involved the examination of the history and present condition of Manorial tenures, and brought into exercise extensive and varied legal learning.

AFFAIRS AT ALBANY.

Foreign Insurance Companies in the State—Telling the Railroads—The Sixth City Railroad Project for New-York—Party Discipline Ignored thus far—Propositions of Inquiry after Metropolitan Salaries all Tabled.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Jan. 21, 1859.

In the Senate to-day Senator HUBBELL'S bill to amend the statutes relative to Foreign Insurance Companies doing business in this State, was favorably reported from the Committee on Insurance. It requires that one dollar on the hundred on all premiums received by the agent, broker or correspondent, transacting the business of insurance for any Company not incorporated by the laws of this State, shall be paid to the Comptroller of this State. It compels such agent to obtain a certificate of authority from the Comptroller, and give bonds that he will comply with this statute: every violation of the act is to be punished by a fine of $8,000—one-half to go to the treasury for the benefit of the poor of the county where it is committed. Your readers can better judge than I, whether this would be a constitional enactment. On motion of Senator SMITH, a resolution was adopted calling on the Auditor to report the amount paid to Lieutenant-Governors for travel during the sessions of the Legislature for several years back.

Senator SPINOLA offered the following:

Whereas, The Hon. ALEXANDER S. DIVEN, in an argument before the Court of Appeals, established the fact that he holds a seat in this Senate from a district unconstitutionally organized, thereby establishing the further fact that he is not entitled to a seat in this Senate; therefore,

Resolved, That it be referred to a Select Committee of three, with power to send for persons and papers, in order to inquire by what authority the Hon. ALEXANDER S. DIVEN occupies a seat in this Senate.

The joke was appreciated, Mr. DIVEN explained, and the resolution was lost. The joint resolution asking our members in Congress to oppose a return to the high postage of half-civilized days, was called up and adopted.

In Assembly, the Claims Committee, as usual, reported against all the claims referred to them. The act amendatory of the Firemen's act, the Brooklyn Mercantile Library Association's act of incorporation, and the change of name of a part of Cannon-street, Brooklyn, were favorably reported. The project of establishing the custom of weighing every bag and barrel of flour sold in your City was reported against, and the project stopped. A communication was received from the New-York Commissioners of Records, giving the aggregate amount of their expenses, viz: $601,788 19;—one half the printing of the records yet to be done, but all contracted for.

Notices were given, by Mr. DURYEA, of a bill to compensate the Sheriff of Kings County; by Mr. TUTHILL, of a bill to regulate ferriage between Brooklyn and New-York; by Mr. REILLY, of a bill to regulate the rates of wharfage; by Mr. CONKLIN, to amend the Port-Warden's law; and by Mr. ODYKE, to inforce the liability of common carriers on Express Companies. Bills were introduced by Mr. MOORE, to amend the charter of the South Brooklyn Savings Institution; by Mr. WILSON, to change the corporate title of the North Protestant Dutch Church of Gowanus, Brooklyn.

Mr. PERRY introduced a bill to impose tolls upon "certain Railroad Companies." It is the one reported to the Senate last year by Mr. STOW. It provides that the New-York Central Railroad Company shall pay tolls upon freight transported upon their road; that the New-York and Erie Railroad is to pay tolls upon all through freight: and all roads that connect with the Erie, upon freight passing from points nearer to the Erie Canal than the point where the road intersects the Erie road. The Oswego and Syracuse road to pay tolls. The Rome and Watertown to pay on all freight from the St. Lawrence, Lake Ontario, or from Rome to be shipped on either said river or lake. The Northern Ogdensburgh Railroad Company on all through freight when the Canals are open. But freight from the Champlain Canal on said road shall be exempt. The tolls on railroads to be the same as on the canals, and to go to the Canal Fund. No tolls chargeable on passengers' baggage, live animals, poultry, meat or fish. This act not to apply to freight transported by Express Companies. Tolls not to be charged for a greater distance on any one road than 350 miles—thus putting the Erie Railroad on the same footing with the Central. The Central is authorized to increase its rate of fare to 2½ cents per mile. The effort to refer this matter to a select Committee was unsuccessful.

City Railroad, No. 6. This is the bill introduced to-day by Mr. BACHELLER, of Saratoga. It does not begin, as you might suppose, at Congress Spring, but at the Central Park, to run thence southerly down the Seventh-avenue, down Greenwich-avenue to Sixth-avenue, then diagonally across Sixth-avenue to Eighth-street on Clinton-place, along Clinton-place, thence with a single track to McDougal-street, to Houston, to Thompson, to Canal, to West Broadway, to Duane, to Broadway; back to Church-street, to Canal, to Mercer, to Eighth-street up by the route it took to the point of starting. A track is also allowed from the route named through Thompson and Broome streets to Broadway. The parties named in the bill are George H. Kelsey, John A. C. Grey, Geo. Briggs, —— Hewitt, —— Strong, —— Wood, —— Johnson, and Wm. H. Thompson.

Mr. BATCHELLER'S Avenue A Road (No. 5) bill names Charles Lent, R. J. Jimmerson, J. T. Mills and John F. Marshall and their associates (whoever they may be) as the parties who may lay a double track from Thirty-fourth-street Ferry (East River) through First-avenue to Twenty-third-street, thence through Twenty-third-street to Avenue A, thence through Avenue A to Houston-street, thence through Houston street with a single track to Ludlow-street, thence through Ludlow to New Canal-street through it to the Bowery, through it to Chatham-street, down Chatham to Broadway; back through Chatham to Division, up Division to Essex, through Essex and Avenue A and up the same route that it passed down in the beginning. The road to be completed in two years.

Mr. C. S. SPENCER'S Seventh-avenue Railroad bill (No. 4) names John Kerr, John A. Kennedy, Hugh Smith, Edward P. Cowles, and James B. Taylor. The route is down Seventh-avenue, from Central Park to the old Bloomingdale Road, or Broadway, to Union-place, to University-place, to Sixth-street or Waverly-place, to Greene-street, thence with a single track to Canal-street, to West Broadway, to College-place, to Barclay-street, to Church-street, and with a double track to Broadway; back through Barclay to Church, to Canal-street, to Mercer-street, to Waverly-place or Sixth-street, to connect with the track in University-place. The fourth section provides that the provisions of the act entitled "An Act relative to the Construction of Railroads in Cities, passed April 4, 1854," shall not apply to this act.

Mr. N. A. CHILDS' Ninth-avenue Railroad bill (No. 3) names Nathaniel Jarvis, Jr., James M. Post, John H. Morris, C. C. White, Wm. N. McIntire, Samuel Osgood, John McClare, Jr., and Wm. N. Niles.

The parties named in Mr. REILLY'S Avenue D bill (No. 2) are Samuel W. Mackrell, William Simpson, John E. Develin and William B. Strafford,—all either stage proprietors or connected with the Commissioners of Emigration.

The very bulkiness of the Republican majority has thus far kept party in the background of the Assembly. Mr. ODYKE'S innocent resolution of inquiry—of information as to the amount of the salaries received by the Sheriff, Register, County Clerk, and Corporation Counsel and Attorney of New-York—was very near to defining the line, Thursday. If put to the vote, unamended, it would probably have been carried; or if the Democrats, desirous of concealing the richness of this Fraser's River that meanders through your City Hall, had quietly whispered their objections, it would have been lost from indifference. Nor would Mr. CHANLER'S amendment to inquire from all the counties the profits of these offices have influenced the result. But he proceeded to make a speech, a brief, energetic effort in its oratory, charging Mr. ODYKE and the Republicans with the movement for the simple purpose of bringing up "their masters—the lobby," with rich offerings to their feet; then if the question had been taken there would have been one straight party vote, Mr. ODYKE replied in a quiet, low voice, saying that it was generally rumored that four of these offices netted to each of their holders a salary equal to that of the President of the United States, and that one of them was said to be four times greater than the President's, making no allusion to what Mr. CHANLER had denounced as the brazenness of the resolution. Mr. CONKLING, however, objected to the resolution, that it would furnish no information, and Mr. SPENCER, for reasons that he did not state, and so it was tabled. Friday morning, the question reappeared—the amendment was voted down. A new amendment making the investigation extend to the salaries of Port-Wardens and Health Officer, was voted down, several leading Republicans voting for the inclusive on all the parties named as subjects of inquiry, and Mr. ODYKE'S resolution carried,—the House being under the operation of the previous question while the two amendments and the main question were taken. Mr. CONKLING moved a reconsideration, which was tabled—resolution and all. Mr. CONKLING then moved for a Committee to visit New-York and examine the Savings Banks with reference to the amount of their unclaimed deposits. Mr. CHANDLER made a speech objecting. The Speaker from the floor followed with his first speech. He urged the passage of the resolution; because it was generally believed that in the safes of the Savings Banks of New-York were lying unclaimed from $3,000,000 to $6,000,000. These institutions were creatures of the State, and to the State it belonged. With taxes crushing down the city from which the gentleman (Mr. C.) comes, with tremendous debts hanging over us, with a floating debt of nearly $4,000,000, constitutionally contracted, as he believed, sound policy and every principle of a true Republican Government required that this unused, unowned money should be applied by the State, to which it belonged, in trust, toward completing its great works, upon which its prosperity so much depends.

Mr. TOMLINSON (Dem.) followed, showing that to seize the deposits of the Savings Banks would create alarm.

The question was pushed up to the verge of a vote, when Gen. DURYEA, (Republican,) learning that the Savings Banks had not answered the questions already put to them by the House, suggested a little delay. This tipped the dish so far that lots of Republican votes were evidently spilled out, and the mover of the resolution himself tabled all, by moving an adjournment, which was carried.

The Senate has adjourned till Monday, but the House has its coat off and its sleeves rolled up, and prefers to work right on. GLAUCUS.

Important from Hayti.

THE EMPEROR SOULOUQUE'S STATEMENT—THE IMPERIALIST ARMY BULLETIN.

We have just received the first official bulletin of the army of the Haytien Emperor. It gives a diary of the movements of the army from Dec. 28 to Jan. 3, but contains little worthy of repetition.

On the 30th a small French boat, manned by four men, and bringing a M. CLESCA to Gonaives, was seized, and the arrested persons detained until evening, and then allowed to continue its course.

On the 2d of January the Emperor inspected the Army. On the 3d the Emperor visited the ramparts constructed during the night, and was subsequently told that the insurgents, who occupied a position on the River Mont-Roins, had fled, leaving their ammunition.

The Imperial troops then occupied the evacuated position. The most perfect order reigns, and the army exhibits no signs of disaffection.

This bulletin of course treats the revolution, of which we have heretofore had only the insurgents' accounts, from the Soulouque point of view, as a mere temporary riot, not endangering the stability of the empire.

President Buchanan Encourages Home Manufactures.

[From the Harrisburg Telegraph.]

It must be conceded that our worthy President has great versatility of literary talent. Few would have supposed that, amid the cares of State, he could have time or inclination to cast off for a moment the incubus of that Pacific Railroad, or the lingering consequences of the Ostend Manifesto, and turn his colossal mind to whisky. Yet such is the fact. BUCHANAN discourses upon the refreshing beverage with that brevity which is the soul of wit; and it will be a gratifying surprise for the readers of the last Presidential Message to learn that Mr. BUCHANAN can write briefly and to the point. The facts of the case, as related by a cotemporary, are these:

A firm of distillers in Pittsburg, Penn., who put up "rye whisky in ten or one-gallon packages," sent to the White House a package with their compliments. Mr. BUCHANAN, who never flinches when duty calls, exercised his bibulous powers upon the package, and, moved by gratitude to the givers of such goods, penned to them an autograph letter, in which, with tears of gratitude in his eyes, he says: "Your rye whisky excels in mildness and fine flavor any spirits I ever drank." We may imagine the delight of the Pittsburg distillers on the receipt of this message. They probably skipped about the streets of the Iron City for very joy, clasping the President's letter and envelope to their hearts, and saying to their friends, with Miss Flite, "These are documents!" Of course they could not keep their good fortune from the public, and so their whisky advertisements in the newspapers are headed with the name of the President of these United States of America. Nor were they wrong in so doing; for it will be noticed that the President writes as one having authority, and not as an ignoramus on the subject. He stands on a whisky platform—he has had precedents and antecedents, and he boldly meets the issue. Observe that he says this peculiar whisky excels any spirits he ever tasted before. He is evidently a connoisseur in these beverages. He knows old Verzenay or Moet from Jersey cider, and is generally "up" in liquors. He is an authority on the subject; his classic letter will be received as a standard, and "Buchanan on Whisky" will go down to posterity in company with "Fry on Job" and "Napier on Logarithms."

ELOPEMENT EXTRAORDINARY AND ARREST.—The Pittsburg papers announce the arrest in that city of a man named ANDERSON, under the following circumstances:

About two years ago he lived in Washington City, and was in Government employ. He had a wife and four children, who, it would appear, were devoted to him, and with whom he might have been happy. But, unfortunately for his happiness and that of his family, he had become acquainted with a lady who was then matron of the Government Asylum at Washington. The acquaintance grew to intimacy, and at length to something worse. The conduct of the matron soon excited remark, and it became necessary to discharge her from the institution. The next day she and her paramour left the city, and they went—no one knew whither. About sixteen months ago, Mr. REMOND SKIDMORE, a brother of Mrs. ANDERSON, came to Pittsburg, and has resided there ever since. On Monday night he happened to call in at DAVIS' auction rooms, and among the crowd there he was surprised to find his lost brother-in-law. Without making himself known he traced ANDERSON to a house, where the guilty pair lived, and on Tuesday had him and her arrested. They were detained for a further hearing, and appeared overwhelmed with shame; the woman was closely veiled, and the man scarcely ventured to raise his eyes from the floor. If married, and it can be proven, ANDERSON will be held to answer the charge of bigamy.

TWENTY-NINTH OVERLAND MAIL.

Details of Intelligence from California, Oregon, Washington and Fraser's River, &c.

St. Louis papers of the 19th inst. contain the news brought by the Overland Mail which left San Francisco on the 24th ult., from which we glean the following. We have received telegraphic advices of the thirtieth Overland Mail, which arrived at St. Louis on Thursday. These advices were published in the TIMES of yesterday:

From the Los Angeles Star, Dec. 25.

Company E, Sixth Infantry, are to encamp, for the present, at Martin's Ranch, in the Cajon Pass, to await the orders of Colonel HOFFMAN.

Lieutenant DAVIDSON, appointed Regimental Quartermaster to the First Dragoons, arrived on the steamer Senator, and will leave probably to-morrow for Fort Tejon, where the head-quarters of the regiment are at present stationed.

Colonel HOFFMAN left town on Thursday morning for the purpose of examining the Mojave country, with the view of locating the new military post. At the Cajon Pass he will be joined by an escort of the First Dragoons, consisting of fifty men, under the command of Captain DAVIDSON, with Lieutenant CHAPMAN.

The following are the names of the officers in command of Company E, Sixth Infantry, who arrived here by the steamer Senator: Col. HOFFMAN, commanding Regiment; Lieut. D. CLARK, commanding Company E; Lieut. Jas. A. SMITH, A. A. Quartermaster; Dr. W. J. EDGAR, Surgeon; JOHN S. MILLER, Clerk to Quartermaster; Mr. BETHEL, Sutler.

From the Alta California.

The Overland Mail stage, which left yesterday, took no through passengers, and but 356 letters.

The deposits of gold at the Mint, last week, amounted to 5,052 ounces, worth $95,000. The coinage of the week amounted to $128,000.

A Mr. PEARCE succeeded in harpooning a humpbacked whale in Tomales Bay, on the 19th inst., and towed him ashore. On measuring the monster, it was found to be 60 feet in length, and 12 feet in breadth across the back. It is estimated it will yield about 75 barrels of oil.

A specimen of quartz has recently been found in Nevada County, on Rush Creek, which the Democrat thinks will prove the richest lead yet discovered in this State. The lead, says the Journal, is from ten to eighteen inches in thickness, has been opened along the surface for a distance of about ten feet, and some six hundred pounds of rock taken out, in all of which gold is visible. The specimen now before us weighs some five or six pounds, for which the owners of the land were offered a hundred dollars, and we are informed that it is just about the average richness of the lead. From fifty to one hundred pounds of the richest rock was packed two miles to where the owners live, in buckets, and they estimate that it contains from two to three thousand dollars in gold, and from what we have been told, we should judge that the estimate is rather below than above the mark. The lead is about three miles from Nevada, and was discovered about two months ago, by Mr. WM. B. SWAN, who immediately formed a company, and 1,400 feet of the lead was taken up and recorded. Without being aware of the richness of the lead, the company commenced running a tunnel. Some of the members becoming discouraged, sold out their interests, and on Friday last the remaining members concluded to open the lead on the surface before going to more expense in running the tunnel. On opening the lead, they soon discovered that the rock was unsurpassingly rich. They are now prosecuting the work on the tunnel, which will strike the lead about seventy-five feet below the surface, and a man is employed to constantly watch the lead, to keep outsiders from carrying away the rock.

From the Honolulu Advertiser, Dec. 2.

The whaling-bark Rajah, of New-Bedford, was wrecked in the Ochotsk Sea, on the 18th October, involving the loss of thirteen lives. An account of the catastrophe is furnished to the Advertiser, by Capt. S. H. WHITESIDE, of the ship Condor. The wreck took place on the N.W. end of Big Shanter Island, during a heavy gale from the N.E., with snow. On the 17th, Capt. STEWART supposed his ship was thirty or forty miles to the northward of the Islands, and was lying to under close-reefed mainsopsail and reefed foresail—(he had previously lost his foretopmast)—was heading to the eastward. At 8 A. M. on the 18th, discovered land all along under the ice. He immediately wore ship, but could not head clear of the point. It blowing very hard, the ship made no headway, was thrown broadside on shore, and in less than five minutes broke up. Out of twenty-six men on board, only thirteen escaped alive.

The following is a correct list of those lost:

Captain Ansel Steward, of Fairhaven, Mass.; found and buried. First mate, Thos. Hamlin, of Falmouth, Mass.; John Cooper Fawcett, of Catskill, N. Y.; John Moran, of Troy, N. Y., found and buried; Charles Gould, of New-Bedford; Andrew Delaney, of New-York City; Andrew J. Hadley, of Northfield, Vt.; Frank Jacet, of Flores, Western Islands; Joe King, same; Manuel Antone, of St. George, Western Islands, found and buried; Frank, of Pico, Western Islands: John Glass, of Guan, found and buried; John Spansh, of Talcahuano, found and buried.

On the 22d November, Capt. WHITESIDE succeeded in rescuing the survivors, and saved about 200 barrels of oil from the wreck. It is quite remarkable that just one-half of the ship's company were lost.

LATER FROM THE NORTH.

The steamship Panama, which had been several days overdue, from the North, arrived in port on Monday, the 20th. The principal news is of the weather—which has been exceedingly inclement—and the freezing of Fraser River, below Fort Langley. According to the latest accounts, brought by the steamer Beaver, which reached Victoria on the evening of 7th December, with eighty passengers, the river was frozen over to the depth of an inch and a-half, from Langley down to its mouth.

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE.—The Legislature of Washington Territory convened on Monday, 6th December.

A JUDGE RESIGNED.—Judge WILLIAMS has resigned his office as Chief Justice of Oregon Territory.

Two Indians were murdered, and another severely wounded, on Nov. 28, at Yoncalla, Umpqua County, by some reckless whites. A good deal of excitement had been caused by the massacre, and the people there had arrested seven of the ruffians supposed to be engaged in the outrage.

The glorious and welcome rain has been falling steadily for the past 24 hours, a guarantee of plentiful crops and abundant harvests.

We learn, says the Marysville Express, that on the 20th of December, the Rev. Father SLATTERY, of the Catolic Church of this city, was robbed of $80 and a gold watch. On Saturday morning, a German, on whom suspicion rested, was arrested at Bangor, and while he was in AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Are They Wanted?—Is It Wise to Create Them?

It is some time ago since it was found out that the Federal Government had its many little prejudices, among which was a chronic indisposition to aid agriculture. It had multitudinous largess for commerce; manufactures by dint of importunity were always securing some share of favor, now larger and now less; internal improvements in one guise or another would have their gratuities; education secured its six miles square all over the public domain; navigation had its river and harbor appropriations; science its Smithsonian Institution, its Coast Survey, and the National Observatory. The time has come, said these innovators, when something should be done for that neglected child of the soil, Agriculture; and after a perplexing choice of modes, an allotment of a vast body of the public lands was decided upon; and in the form of a bill for endowing Agricultural Colleges, one in each of the States, last Spring passed through the the House of Representatives; that the Committee upon the Public Lands in the House reported the bill adversely; and that, in a different form, on the same day it issued from the Committee, it was passed by a vote of 105 to 101, is a fact completing the historical record of the measure to the moment of its introduction into the Senate. It is now on the business calendar of that body, where its friends reckon upon reaching it during the present session, and passing it by a decided majority.

The leading traits of the bill may be readily stated. It withdraws nearly six millions of acres of land—5,920,000 acres—from sale, assigning them to the several States, in the ratio of 20,000 acres for each Senator and Representative to which the State is entitled. These are to be represented by scrip issued to the several States by the Department of the Interior, which the State is required to invest in an inviolable fund, for the maintenance of an Agricultural College. The land for a model farm may be paid for from the principal; but none of it shall go for buildings or other necessary apparatus. These are to be supplied by the State. The appropriation is otherwise strictly an endowment. There are minor provisions regulating the selection and the price of the lands. The bill is in this shape in the hands of the Land Committee of the Senate, whence it will issue presently, to be put upon its third reading, and its passage. It is hardly probable that the measure will encounter any serious opposition, until it meet a Presidential veto, which, after the veto of Miss DIX's Insane Land bill, by President PIERCE, it is quite likely to evoke.

And the reason for such unprecedented prosperity lies less in the intrinsic merits of the bill than in the risk of personal unpopularity in withstanding it. It is a concession to the most important interest in the country; an interest that has been neglected, and almost proscribed; one that is powerful enough to avenge any wrong done it, real or imaginary; one that at the ballot-box pays promptly all accounts left unsettled in the chambers of legislation. Yet, the truth is, agriculture has suffered no neglect at the hands of the Federal Government. More than any other public interest it has shared in all the advantages of beneficial legislation. If territories have been prematurely thrown open, or hastily transformed into States, it has been for the benefit of the cultivator of the soil. If railroads have been the recipients of land grants, the enormity of which have startled all careful economists, in the new regions thus connected with the market the farmer has been the largest gainer. If, in the allotment of a section to school purposes, at short intervals throughout the entire public domain, education has been encouraged, all the advantage of the education and the encouragement belong to the agriculturist who has thus been enabled to settle within the reach of that indispensable household need, the school-house. The Patent Office is busied day and night in developing and introducing the inventive talent of the country for the benefit of the cultivators of the soil. What reapers, mowers, plows, threshing-machines; what horse-hoes, cultivators, seed-sowers; what churns, cheese-presses, and washing-machines, has not the protection lent to invention indirectly furnished to the alleviation of the cost and care and labor of the farmer? And if we add to the count the zealous labors of the Patent office, in disseminating new varieties of seed; n collecting and distributing agricultural information; in elaborating its annual report; in calling together the most skillful of cultivators to extract the results of their experience and give it to the clod-compelling public gratuitously, we shall see how unjust is the charge that Government does nothing for the farmer. And the picture will gain in distinctness, when we reflect that the whole revenue system of the country favors the agriculturist while it oppresses the manufacturer and the merchant; and that should the day ever come when direct taxation shall replace the expensive machinery of custom-house and sub-treasury, the farmer will appreciate his long preceding exemption from federal impositions.

But were the fact otherwise, there is much good reason to deprecate this line of argument. It frames an infinitude of pleas for an infinitude of professions and industrial interests, each one of which can say, with far greater honesty, it has experienced no favor at the hands of the National Government. The medical, the clerical, the mercantile, the scientific interests of the country have received only incidentally the slightest patronage of Congress. If we have colleges of agriculture with national endowments, why not colleges of medicine, of theology, of engineering, of navigation, of mechanic arts, of the fine arts, and of the arts of industrial design? Why not grant vast areas of the national domain to found institutions that shall furnish us astronomers, geologists, and surveyors. And if assuming to meddle with the business of education, in what way could we better intervene than in the education and elevation of the laboring classes, whose means are insufficient to provide opportunities for themselves, and whose deficient culture is the source of a larger portion of social disorder and crime? Indeed, simply as a precedent, nothing could be more mischievous than this wholesale measure, leaving as it does the administration of the Federal Government chargeable with gross impartiality, if it withhold similar grants to a thousand contradictory claimants.

There is, moreover, an entire failure of evidence to show a desire on the part of the farming interest for this concession. The prejudice against book or scientific farming is certainly passing away; but in his weekly and monthly periodical devoted to agricultural topics, the farmer finds quite as much scientific farming as his leisure permits him to study, and his laboring hours to practice. While, in a general way, the idea of a prodigious donation to the class may please the ear, very few working farmers, we venture to say, would entertain the thought of sending his sons, destined to rural pursuits, to an agricultural college. If anything beyond the usual Common School curriculum be desired, the chemistry and the vegetable physiology requisite to furnish forth a good theoretical agriculturist, may be had at any of the more advanced schools and colleges of private endowment, one of which is never distant from any man's door. Nay, the establishment of chairs, with especial reference to agricultural chemistry, is already contemplated in some of the larger institutions. Such facilities are all that can reasonably be required. If more be wanted, let the works of LIEBIG, of the two JOHNSONS, and of all the better European and American authorities in the chemistry of agriculture, be digested in proper manuals and introduced into our common schools and colleges, and all that is required to complete the speculative farmer will be supplied. All else—the practice, and the skill, which nothing but practice can communicate—he must find—and the parent will desire him to find upon the parental homestead. If more than the chemistry of plants and of soils be wished for the student, and the agricultural college be furnished to afford it, it will come in improper and disastrous conflict with existing public and private institutions of learning. If no more be wished, the sensible farmer will hardly consider the erection of this army of colleges as necessary to teach a single specialty, the practical value of which is not admitted by the bulk of cultivators, whether the fact be the fruit of ignorance, or of prejudice, or of both. We repeat, there is no proof that these agricultural colleges are the wish or the want of the farmers.

Passing, however, from these extrinsic considerations to the special merits of the immediate bill, we find still more conclusive grounds of objection. Its largest endowments are to those States whose population already is the largest, and increasing with diminished rapidity; while to States of equal magnitude, and destined to contain vastly larger numbers, the endowment is extremely disproportioned. Thus New-York, with an area of 29,440,000 acres, is to receive 700,000 acres of land; while Iowa, with a wider area, namely, 32,548,960 acres, and likely to contain in the next ten years at least as large a rural population as New-York, receives but 80,000. Massachusetts, where the population is chiefly urban, and where agriculture, by the pinch of necessity, is carried to an extreme advance, gets 260,000 acres, while Georgia, with eight times the surface, and incalculable lack of agricultural skill, obtains but 200,000 acres; while Texas, an empire of itself, destined to hold a thousand times the rural population of Massachusetts, has no more than 80,000 acres. It is vain to claim any sensible desire to aid agriculture in such random apportionments as these. They are clearly made without reference to the wants of the several States, or to the comparative claims of different sections. They have all the indications of a desire to win popularity by the éclat of a prodigious act of liberality to an important interest, regardless of the circumstance that the measure in its details defeats its own pretentious purpose.

For these reasons it is to be hoped this bill will not become a law. The agricultural interest is not entitled to ask such a grant; has not asked it; could not ask it without establishing a wretchedly mischievous precedent; would obtain no practical benefit from it, if conceded. If the measure obtain the consideration in the Senate that it failed to get in the House, there can be no doubt about its fate.

The Dred Scott Case—How Far the Decision of the Supreme Court is Binding.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: Governor MORGAN, and your own article of Monday upon the subject of "Territorial Sovereignty," have discussed the subject thoroughly and ably, so far as either has gone; but will you not permit a Republican to state as briefly as possible the ground on which Republicans yet claim that Congress has still, of right, the contro of Slavery in the Territories?

As good citizens, we submit to the decision of the Supreme Court so long as it remains unreversed; but it is notorious that it has no moral worth, and binds the North now only b its legal force, which may be dissolved forever, the moment the question shall be again brought up to the Court and fairly tried.

What moral force can the decision in the Dred Scott case have? The arguments of the Judges have convinced no one. They are ropes of sand and the most reprehensible specimens of special pleading that ever disgraced a court of justice. This is so obvious to legal minds who have examined the subject, that we cannot presume the Supreme Court ever expected they would be regarded in any other light, by those capable of judging; We do not stop to discuss this question further but we do ask, what confidence can we have in such a decision, made by a bare majority of such, a Court; and that majority packed for that special question, (among others of the kind,) and deciding the question with Southern halters about their necks? First, as to the packing.

The slaveholders, constituting only one-third or one-fourth part of all the free voters of the United States, have a majority of the judges in that Court, appointed from their own midst; and these judges slaveholders themselves, and personally and pecuniarily interested in the question! And how have they been thus packed? We had one illustration of the process, during the Administration of Mr. FILLMORE. For a Judge in that Court he nominated a Southern man, when the South had already more than their share of Judges; but that was not enough for them. Mr. FILLMORE was soon informed that the South would reject his nominee in the Senate. Why? Because, forsooth he was not sound upon the Slave question! That is, he was an honest, able man, and living at the South; but he might not decide the Territorial Slave question according to Southern views; and Mr. FILLMORE, like too many other Northern Presidents desirous of Southern favor, thought best to submit to their dictation; and thus we see how some of the packing of Supreme Judges has been done.

We have alluded to Southern halters about the necks of Southern Judges, and by some it may be regarded as a caricature. If so, it is significant. For who, in all these United States, understanding all the influences at work, expected, or thought for one moment, that Southern Judges, packed as they had been, would dare to decide any other way than they did? For, aside from their having accepted their offices under such circumstances, and their being slaveholders, and pecuniarily interested in the question, they knew, and everybody else knew, that it would not be wholesome for them, personally, to decide otherwise than they did decide; and that they had everything to fear from a decision adverse to the views of the South—from which the most respectable citizens had been driven by violence for expressing an adverse opinion, and a Senator had been struck down in his place, with wounds that will carry him to his grave. We repeat, that no man with intelligence upon the subject expected for one moment that these Southern Judges would ever decide the case in favor of freedom and law; but those of us who had not personally preëxamined the law, did expect that they would succeed better than they have done in covering up their tracks with reason and argument. Why, then, should Republicans, or people of the North generally, regard such a decision as conclusive? or desist from doing all they can, legally and properly, to secure the ultimate correction and subversion of a decision that is not founded in right, or upon legal or constitutional principles?

If we are asked how we are going to help ourselves under present circumstances, we answer—that we have a large majority of voters in the United States, and if we shall help ourselves against an illegal decision, just as the South has helped themselves to procure it, the South ought to be ashamed to open their mouths against it; and this is enough for us to say at present.

It must be remembered that in this we are not contending for a fruitless victory, but for our own valuable rights as Northern men, and as free men. As usual, Southern men make a great noise about their right to go into the territories upon "equal terms with Northern men;" but their noise is a sham, for nobody denies them this right. But when they ask to take slaves there, they ask to go there upon unequal terms. Freemen say to them in reply, "Come, as we do, with your families, your cattle and your property that is not a nuisance, and you are as welcome as we are; but you have no right to come with a nuisance in the shape of negroes, (tolerated only where you are,) and place this nuisance down upon our noses; to depreciate our property, to render our homes uncomfortable and dangerous; our labor fruitless; and to degrade ourselves, and make us, poor beginners upon the soil, worse off than your slaves. It is so wherever Slavery prevails. A poor man cannot get up from his poverty in a slave country. His slaveholding neighbor can undersell him in market, or his slaves are worthless. He is despised by the slaveholder because he works with his own hands. The slaveholder has, besides, time and opportunity to circumvent and outmanage him in all public affairs. While the poor man is laboring, his slaveholding neighbor can visit his fellow-slaveholders, to lay their plans, and to carry them out. His children are not educated, and inherit only their father's poverty and degradation; for it is not the policy of the slaveholder to establish schools upon the soil to raise them up. Well, indeed, may free men going into a new territory object to Slavery. He can say, and does say to the slaveholder, "Come on equal terms with us, but bring with you no slave-nuisance to annoy, endanger, oppress and degrade us and our children. Your State laws tolerate that nuisance where you are, but they do not authorize you to impose it upon us here; and your pretence that you cannot come here on equal terms without it, is simply the essence of hypocrisy, and an insult to common sense."

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Tuesday, January 18, 1859.

The Seat-of-Government Question has assumed yet another phase. Her Gracious Majesty—there seems no reason to doubt—has sent us another dispatch, insisting, in plain terms, that her award in favor of Ottawa shall be carried out at once. This is rather unexpected, and puts quite a new face on the matter. Some say they won't go for Ottawa upon compulsion. Others again, more loyal, declare that they will now support the claims of Ottawa at all hazzards. By the British Constitution, Her Majesty possesses the undoubted right to summon her Parliament to meet her wherever she pleases. The English Parliament has met at York, at Oxford, &c., as well as at London. And, as we Canadians have adopted the British Constitution here, it follows that her Majesty may—by virtue of her prerogative—summon the Canadian Parliament to consult with her at any place she may choose; so that the people have, of right, nothing to say in the matter. But prerogative is often most respected when not exercised. Canada is more democratic than Great Britain, and as this Seat-of-Government Question is made the dividing one between rival factions—I will not call them parties—we may see strange events happening.

The Canadian coinage, just issued, is very beautiful. The Queen's head, on one side, is the best ever stamped. On the other side the denomination of the coin is surrounded by a wreath of our national maple. I send you a specimen of the coin, which you will doubtless be happy to show to any curious numismatologist. Coinage, they say, is the test and sign of empire. You will observe that under VICTORIA's head is the word "Canada."

THOS. D'ARCY MCGEE has just published a volume of poems. You remember MCGEE, the editor of the American Celt, a violent Anti-British Young Ireland periodical, of course. It was this same MCGEE who was the hero of the cabbage-garden rebellion, in Ireland, in '48; who escaped from Ireland in a coal ship, and was outlawed; who published the Celt, in which he wrote "The Felon Flag of England," and blessed heaven that the blood of the English tyrants was flowing freely in the Crimea; who was outlawed by the British authorities; who was pardoned by the Queen; who was all but excommunicated by your Archbishop HUGHES; who, disgusted by the want of sympathy shown to him by the New-Yorkers, especially of the Know-Nothing Order, came to Canada; who, settling in Montreal, published the New Era newspaper, in which he advocated the consolidation of the British-American Colonies into a kingdom, to be ruled by one of Queen VICTORIA's sons; who, at the general election of 1857-58 was returned as a Member of Parliament for Montreal, the largest city in the Provinces; who is now one of the most powerful men in Canada, leader of the major part of the Roman Catholics; whose influence it was that created the Brown-Dorion ministry, in which he refused the position of Provincial Secretary, and who wrote the missive which Bishop (R. C.) CHABBONNEL signed, and which was read in all the Roman Catholic Churches in Montreal, telling the people to support that Ministry; who has no other means of living (besides his Parliamentary wages) than lecturing throughout the country; who, as an orator, a politician, or a wit and a conversationalist, stands almost unrivalled in Canada. MCGEE's poems, some of them, are good; in others he perpetrates bulls, as when he speaks of an object "obscur'd by light."

We have so little literature here that we hail with pleasure any contributions to our stock. Authors are wretchedly paid because so little demand exists for their productions. Mr. LOVELL, of Montreal, is the only man who publishes anything worth mentioning. He has just given to the world the only two Canadian novels we have, viz.: Simon Seek and Canadian Homes. These are written by a young man named NIMMO, one of the editors of the Protectionist newspaper, and are designed to advocate the principle o protection to home manufactures by means of a high tariff of Customs duties.

Apropos of Customs duties, I may remark that our Inspector-General, Mr. GALT, (son of Mr. GALT, the English author, BYRON's friend,) has issued circulars to the Boards of Trade in our various cities, asking their opinion as to the working of our tariff, The Montreal people have replied that they desire the perfect assimilation of our tariff to yours, with a view, eventually, to complete reciprocity between the Provinces and the States, and the abolition, I presume, of all frontier Custom-houses on both sides of the line—all duties to be collected at the seaboard only, and internal trade to be free. This would be something similar to the German Zollverein; it would certainly lessen the expense of collecting Customs duties, by decreasing the number of offices and officers. The recent change in our tariff created a quantity of ad valorem duties. The Customs officers generally dislike them, and a return to the old system of specific duties is advocated. The recommendations of Mr. President BUCHANAN on this subject have been read by us with an interest we do not generally attach to the emanations of his very peculiar genius.

The Northern Railway of Canada, otherwise called the Ontario, Simcoe and Lake Huron Railway, running from this city to Collingwood, on the Georgian Bay of Lake Huron, has been closed by order of the Government Inspector of Railways, as being unsafe. A partial reopening has, however, taken place, as passenger-cars are allowed to be attached to freight rains, and these are suffered to run, during daylight, at a slow rate of speed. This road has only been built for about three years, and the reason of its being unsafe is that one-sixth of the rails are worn out. What a lesson does this teach the managers of roads on this continent! A cheap, slight rail may cost less at first than one of a good pattern and make, but in the end will prove by far the most expensive. The best rails will last eight or nine years.

The officers who were charged with illegally kidnapping a man named SNOWIE—arresting him without a proper warrant and handing him over to the United States authorities against his will—have been tried. The jury could not agree. Eleven were for conviction and one for acquittal. Finally the prisoners withdrew their plea of "Not guilty," and pleaded "Guilty." Their sentence will be lenient, as it is the first case of the kind which has come before the Courts. The strong point made by the prosecution was, that if the men were acquitted, we should frequently hear of the recapture by American officers of the fugitive slaves who might have found refuge on Canadian soil.

Mr. CHAS. ALLAN, member of the Provincial Parliament for the North Riding of the county of Wellington, died last Thursday evening at Hamilton, of disease of the heart, suddenly, while on a visit to a friend.

The Canadian Geological Surveyors have issued another work, containing several very beautiful plates illustrative of some of our fossils. It doubtless does credit to Sir WM. LOGAN, the chief geologist, and all his staff; but, as the work is printed at the public expense, some of the people are beginning to think they are paying dearly for their whistle.

Latest from the Kansas Gold Mines.

From the Leavenworth Daily Times, Jan. 7.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT, of St. Louis, Mr. WILLIAM A. GREEN, of Chicago, and ROBERT MIDDLETON, arrived in this city last evening, direct from Pike's Peak, having accomplished the journey in seventeen days—the quickest time ever made upon the Plains. About three days previous to leaving Pueblo, a party came in from the Platte, who reported nothing doing, in consequence of the severity of the weather. Five days previous to leaving Pueblo, there were several hundred sheep frozen to death in that vicinity.

Nothing is doing in any part of the mines of any consequence. The streams are all frozen, and the ground to the depth of eighteen inches. Provisions are abundant, and game plenty. Nothing will probably be done till Spring, but the miners are encouraged, and think the yield of the district will afford adequate and remunerative pay.

From Smoky Hill to the Arkansas, wood and water were abundant. The Leavenworth route to the mines is unquestionably the best—the distance is also in its favor, and the advantages of the route in wood and water are far above that of any other. The Cheyennes and Arpahoes inhabit the country north of the Arkansas—the Kiowas, Camanches and Apaches the country south. The only point of difficulty with the Indians is created by the title to the territory now occupied by the miners, but no collision is anticipated.

The Louisville Courier pronounces the story of a planter near that city selling his own daughter "a canard of the first water."

Social Life at Washington—The New Order of Things.

From the Philadelphia Press.

Social life in Washington is a curious study. We have had a new heraldry in official circles since Lecompton became the gospel of the Administration. Forgetting that there are other cakes and ale in the land, the President restricts his bread and butter to the faithful alone. Before you can sit at his board you must worship at his shrine. You cannot make your face to shine with his wine and oil unless you submit to his politics. He does not even dispense a smile except for a consideration. You may see him if you go to a reception; but, if he knows you to be of an opposing party, he will freeze you with a look, or knock you down with a sneer. Under FILLMORE and PIERCE the White House was not an ice-house. The poorest clerks were welcome. The political foe ate the bread of the Executive, with none to molest and to make him afraid, and stood in the presence without trembling.

I have never known Washington more delightful, notwithstanding the Siberian hospitality at the West End of the avenue. Mr. CORCORAN, who has done so much to beautify this fair city, and whose charities are as unostentatious as they are voluntary and frequent, though no longer a favorite at the White House—especially since BENNETT, of the Herald, has been indorsed for his assaults upon private character by the head of the Government—entertains with sumptuous liberality. Mr. Vice-President BRECKINRIDGE, who is also in the shade of the Buchanan dynasty, lives cosily, with a part of his Kentucky delegation, in Sixth-street. Mr. Speaker ORR, and his eloquent and excitable friend, Col. KEITT, receive their visitors at their genial head-quarters corner of Eighth and E streets. The Hon. HORACE F. CLARK, one of the brave men who did right at the first session, and comes back to the second reélected and rejuvenated, flourishes on his ample fortune at the beautiful residence of the late Major LINDSAY, meeting his guests with open-handed cordiality. BRODERICK has elegant rooms on the Avenue, which are crowded nightly with his friends. HASKIN and HICKMAN are entirely too comfortable for two such radical Anti-Administration men. Mr. and Mrs. Senator DOUGLAS were never before so popular with the visiting and fashionable world. The receptions of the fair lady are crowded. No party spirit reigns there. All are received with genuine kindness. North and South mingle in genial harmony. The respectable citizen and his family—the stranger from other States and countries—are greeted like old friends when properly presented. The Republicans have a good time of their own. They make amends for their exclusion from the West End by paying attention to each other; content with their own circle, but by no means cositive of their fare when enabled to reciprocate.

The Americans were always a gay omnibus full. Headed by glorious CRITTENDEN, and inspired by jolly JOHN THOMPSON, (not JOHN R.,) with HUMPHREY MARSHALL, TRIPPE, WINTER DAVIS and MORRISON HARRIS, and the rest, they make many a round robin, and cause many a round table to roar and groan with wit and wine. Nor do all the Administration dole out their good things. Though you cannot go to COBB's or to BLACK's, (and you deserve it for being so severe in your paper,) others can, and they say that the receptions are very agreeable. Mr. and Mrs. SICKLES are taking in the worshipers; nowhere is there a more refined or generous welcome, and nowhere are Pennsylvanians so glad to rally. Among the outsiders—the non-officials—there is an over-abundance of social feeling. Here you find the heart of Washington society—a spontaneous sincerity, a contempt for mere wealth, an admiration of intellect, you meet nowhere else. Ex-Marshal HOOVER is a host in more respects than one, and his kind, gentle, and true-hearted lady is never happier than when making others happy. Then we have MAGUIRE, with his beautiful picture-gallery, and his splendid library, his agreeable reunions, where you will often meet such celebrities as WM. C. RIVES, of Virginia; ELLIOTT, the artist; GAYLORD CLARK, of the Knickerbocker; PIKE, of Arkansas; PRENTICE, of the Louisville Journal; PETER FORCE, GALES and SEATON, and, when they are in town, FORREST, BROUGHAM, BURTON, "and the rest." COYLE, of the Intelligencer; HEISS, of the States; RIVES, of the Globe; F. P. BLAIR, at Silver Spring, outside of the town; BEAL, the old sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, are among the readiest to see their friends, and even to meet their opponents, at their own houses.

You will see from this how powerless the effort is to control the good feeling of our people, and to make the relations of private life and intercourse among human beings dependent upon the whim of a weak man, who happens to be President for the time being.

The new British Minister, LYON, is an unmarried man, as I hear. It is rare that one of the scions of the English nobility is caught by an American woman, though Sir GORE OUSELEY was. Some high expectations are entertained as to the new Ambassador.

There is no more chance for the thirty million bill of Mr. SLIDELL than there would be for a bill to sell the District of Columbia. I speak advisedly. We have no money down here for Cuba. Mr. BUCHANAN has got himself, as usual, into a scrape, and he wants to work out of it. Unawed by the indignation of the Spanish people, without whose consent he cannot, for a moment, approach the subject of purchasing Cuba, he attempts to drive a bargain before their eyes, as if for the purpose of still further outraging them. DOUGLAS, though averse to the appropriation at this time, defers to the Presidential programme, votes for it, and lets the President take the responsibility. This is alike magnanimous and statesmanlike.

The Slave-Rescue Case in Ohio—Arrest of the Student Lincoln in his School—Letter from Prof. Peck, of Oberlin.

From the Columbus State Journal.

OBERLIN, Tuesday, Jan. 18, 1858.

EDITOR STATE JOURNAL: Your readers have been advised of the facts that the alleged rescuers of the slave JOHN, at Wellington, have been indicted, and most of them have voluntarily appeared in Court to answer to the bills found against them. They will, perhaps, be interested to hear of a new feature which the case has taken on—the violent ARREST, IRONING and IMPRISONMENT in your county, of one of the parties indicted. The gentleman who has suffered the indignity I am about to describe is a young Englishman, a member of college in this place, and a person of excellent character and deportment. Before notice of the indictments was served, Mr. LINCOLN, for such is his name, had gone to your county to take a school. The fact that he was in the neighborhood was presently discovered by Mr. SAMUEL DAVIS, a bailiff in the United States Court, and a helper of Deputy Marshal LOWE, in "the Wellington case." With a zeal worthy of his Wellington antecedents, Mr. DAVIS wrote to Cleveland for a warrant for the arrest of LINCOLN, and on its arrival he made haste to execute it. The serving of the writ occurred in this wise: About 1½ o'clock on Friday last, Mr. LINCOLN was engaged in the duties of his school, when suddenly one of the children cried out with terror, (for threats from the officers had reached the ears of the scholars,) "Master, there comes SAM. DAVIS." "Well, children," answered the teacher, "whatever may happen, keep perfectly quiet."

There was a knock, the door opened, Mr. DAVIS and another of the same breed presented themselves. "Your name is LINCOLN?" abruptly said the official. "It is," "Ah! you are just the man I want; I've got a warrant for your arrest, so come along." And while saying this the dignitary drew from his pocket a pair of manacles, which he proceeded to attach to the person of his prisoner. "Stop," says LINCOLN, "I shall make no resistance; I shall of course go with you; you need not put these things upon me." But the plea was of no avail. The official could not lose the opportunity for revenging the fright he got at Wellington. So, kindly giving his captive permission to say a few words to his school, he drove off with his prisoner in chains; and that prisoner an unoffending, Christian man, who would have scorned to make the least resistance to the writ which was being served. I ought to say that the valiant official did not get away until the outraged children had launched at him a good many epithets less complimentary than true.

The arrest completed, DAVIS proceeded to lodge his prisoner in the jail in your city, which was twelve miles distant. On the way, he was several times asked to remove the irons, but refused to do so; nor were the manacles unclasped till the prisoner had been taken into the interior of the jail and introduced to Marshal LOWE. Then, when LOWE had sufficiently triumphed over his prey, the young man was turned loose among the felons who were to be his companions for the night. Precisely how desirable a lodging among thieves in a fetid cell swarming with rats was likely to be, you can imagine as well as I.

Presently, the prisoner made an effort to communicate with personal acquaintances in the city; but the greatest favor he could receive, was the promise that a letter should be lodged in the Post-Office (to get thence to its destination after he should be miles away.) But, though in bonds, the captive was honored with company. Two or three men came in, evidently either to sound or taunt him. One of the visitors was DAYTON, Clerk of the House, who hails (and we always put on sackcloth and ashes when we acknowledge it) from our place. As he was "in cahoot" with LOWE when that worthy was man-hunting in Lorain, it was proper that he should be invited in to share the official's triumph. Some of us wonder that we did not think of making some recompense for the protection he enjoyed at our hands, when his soul shivered before popular rage which his complicity with kidnapping roused, by hastening to Professor MONROE, whether he was asked to do so or not, and telling him of the plight a neighbor was in.

Not to dwell on further particulars, I may say that the prisoner was kept with no food till the next morning at 3 o'clock, when LOWE started with him for Cleveland. At Cleveland the prisoner was discharged on his own recognizance, as soon as Judge WILSON could be found. Now, if manacles and imprisonment in a jail are not singular treatment for a man who is on his way to be discharged on his own recognizances, and whom the attending officer had reason to suppose would be so discharged, then I am altogether mistaken.

And I am still more mistaken if DAVIS and LOWE do not find, before they get through with this matter, that kidnapping in Ohio and all its adjuncts are serious and expensive amusements. I promise you, Sir, that the fire which this outrage has kindled in Lorain will not go out till an effort has been made to teach these arbitrary and insolent officials that freemen know what their rights are. Respectfully, yours,

H. E. PECK.

MR. FORSYTH AND THE SILVER BARS.—The Mobile Register is "authorized" to say: "That Mr. FORSYTH assumes and avows the whole responsibility connected with the secretion of the treasure in question—that he is prepared to defend and justify the act—that he will make public all the facts and circumstances of the case as soon as it can be done with safety to the parties in Mexico, who would be exposed to peril in the civil war now raging in that country by their publication at this time—and that he is entirely confident his course in connection with the affair will meet the full sanction and approval of his countrymen, as well as of his Government.

The Kansas Troubles—Another Message from the Governor of Missouri.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
JEFFERSON CITY, Jan. 14, 1859.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Duty compels me again to call your attention to the condition of affairs upon our Western border, and to urge upon you the necessity for prompt action. Although, by the Constitution, the Governor is made Commander in-Chief of the militia of the State, and a conservator of the peace within the State, yet, by the statutes, this power to call the militia into service is limited to cases of rebellion, insurrection or invasion. Under the recent statute, the authority to call out a military force to preserve order, or to enforce the laws, is invested alone in the Sheriffs of the respective counties; and common sense will suggest that they cannot exercise this power except in cases of immediate necessity. They have no authority to call upon the militia, or other citizens, to act merely in anticipation of a necessity which might or might not exist.

The present difficulties upon our border constitute neither rebellion nor insurrection; for either would imply that the deeds of violence committed there were done by our own citizens, whereas the outlaws referred to reside without the State. Neither can the marauding incursions under which our people are suffering be regarded as an invasion, for a state of war does not exist between the authorities in Kansas and of Missouri. The law-abiding citizens of Kansas cherish the most friendly relations with the citizens of this State, and deplore, as much as we do, the present condition of things, and are making efforts to preserve order. The dangers to which our people are exposed cannot, therefore, be dignified into the importance of an invasion. The marauders are merely freebooters and murderers, yet their number is sufficiently large—amounting to several hundred men, and rapidly increasing—to render the civil power wholly inadequate, either to arrest or suppress them, and however flagrant their outrages, the authorities of this State have no power to cross the line to overtake and punish them.

I have information which shows the necessity and good policy of immediate action. The security of our citizens and the ends of justice demand that there shall be no delay. Prompt measures will probably not only save the lives of our citizens, but speedily and forever put an end to these troubles. I hope, therefore, that another day will not be allowed to pass without decisive and effective legislation.

Very respectfully, R. M. STEWART.

Daring Robbery of Harnden's Express in Providence—The Iron Safe and Contents Carried Off.

We learn from EARL & Co.'s Express, that the Express office on Dorrence-street, corner of Middle-street, Providence, R. I., was entered this morning through the door on Middle-street, by means of false keys, and HARNDEN's iron traveling safe, which arrived at the office about 4 o'clock this morning, was carried off, together with the contents, the precise matter or amount of which cannot be known until they hear from their agent in New-York. A large trunk in the office, used for the transportation of packages and parcels, was broken open, and the contents strewn about the floor. Among the articles in this trunk was a bag containing $6,000 in gold, a bag containing $1,000 in silver, belonging to GORHAM & Co., silversmiths, and two bags of cents. The robbers carried off the bags of cents and that of silver, but left the bag of gold on the floor. The safe was subsequently found in Atwill's-avenue, the distance of one mile and a half from the office, broken open, and the pouch cut open and robbed of its contents.

A watchman is employed in the office throughout the night-time, and upon the arrival of their express from New-York in the morning, it is customary for him to immediately deliver to the periodical dealers near by such papers as arrive for them; and while engaged in that service, which requires but about twenty minutes, he leaves the messenger or driver in the office. This morning, however, both the driver and the watchman went from the office on the wagon together, leaving the office without any one it for not over twenty minutes, and it was during their brief absence that the robbery was committed.

The messenger immediately telegraphed to their agent in New-York to learn the contents of the safe, and will use their utmost endeavors to ferret out the robbers and recover the property.

Rumor has it that money and papers to the value of about $50,000 were stolen, but a messenger who arrived here this forenoon believes this to be an exaggeration.—Boston Journal, Jan. 18.

The Providence Journal gives the following as the circumstances, as far as known, of the robbery:

"The amount reported stolen is $3,300. This consisted of $1 000 in silver, mostly of old American quarters, $100 in cents, and about $200 in paper money. The silver weighed about 56 pounds, and the bags of copper nearly 20 pounds each. The box containing these amounts held also a bag of gold coin, amounting to $5,900. This luckily escaped the notice of the robbers, who mistook the coppers for the genuine yellow. The entrance to the office was effected by the main door, fronting on Dorrance-street. Admission was gained by the aid of false keys, as no damage was done to any of the locks or bolts. An iron safe weighing, with its contents, about two hundred pounds, was taken from the office and rifled of its contents near the foot of Attwell's-avenue. What was in it is not wholly known. When found there were in it several packages of jewelry left unmolested. The safe was made of boiler iron, and could have been opened only by great force. The bolts were bent, and the top broken partly from its hinges.

The opportunity presented to the robbers was one which very rarely occurs. Mr. BATTEY, the watchman in the office, rode out with Mr. Wm. DAKE, the expressman, to distribute the papers which come from New-York each morning in bundles for the periodical dealers. They made the usual circuit, and stopped at Mr. MATHEWSON's to drink a cup of coffee. They were absent not more than twenty minutes, during which the daring piece of rascality was consummated. The intention undoubtedly was to sweep all the money in the safe and box."

The Providence Tribune says, as to the report that there has been stolen just $1,100: "It has, however, leaked out in some mysterious manner, that a very much larger amount is missing. It is one of the strangest things in the world that robbers should spurn jewelry, if there was nothing more valuable and less bulky to be found. It is, also, a strange circumstance that the watchman should be gone at just the time the robbery was committed. Up to a late hour last night no clue was had of the robbers, though the Marshal and his men were unusually active throughout the day."

LAW REPORTS.

Decision in Admiralty.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—JAN. 21.

Before Judge BETTS.

EXCEPTIONS TO REPORT—WEIGHMASTER'S RETURN.

Phœbe Ann Conn, executrix, vs. Thomas B. Coddington et al.—This case came up on exceptions to the Commissioner's report. The libel was filed to recover freight upon iron brought from Liverpool in the ship John J. Boyd, in June, 1856. A question arose as to whether the libellant had delivered all the iron shipped, as the bills of lading called for a larger amount. The Court rendered a decree for the libellant for $418 48, with leave to the respondents to take a reference and give further proof on the question of the amount of iron shipped. The Commissioner reported the same amount of freight due as had been decided by the Court, to which report the respondent excepted.

Held, by the Court, that on the proofs, the report of the Commissioners is supported. The respondents fail to show satisfactorily that the weigher represented accurately the true weight of iron delivered, or that he actually took the weight of the whole cargo; and there is no evidence given by them of the quantity laden on board at Liverpool, other than what is deduced from a comparison of the bills of lading, with statements of the weighmaster, not corroborated by his official original returns.

Report confirmed.

For libellant, Messrs. Owen and Vose. For respondents, Mr. Sherman.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—JAN 21.

Before Judge INGERSOLL.

INDICTMENT.

The Grand Jury came in this morning with a bill in the following case:

The United States vs. Marcus Dorety.—An indictment against one of the crew of the whaleship California, for manslaughter on the high seas, in killing another of the crew, named William Trausul, with a cutting spade.

REQUISITE NUMBER FOR A GRAND JURY.

Judge INGERSOLL asked the Jury if they had any other business before them. The Foreman said there was one other case, but there were not enough Jurors present to transact business, there being but fourteen present. The Judge told them they were under a mistake on that point; that twelve was a sufficient number to do business, but they would in that case all have to concur in order to find a bill.

The Jury retired, but shortly afterwards returned without any bill, and were discharged for the Term, with the thanks of the Court.

DEMAND OF COPY COMPLAINT.

Welsh vs. Kunzhardt.—(Common Pleas, Special Term.)—Motion to set aside plaintiff's proceedings.

Brady, J.—The copy of the complaint need not be served with the summons, but if the defendant appears within the twenty days allowed by the code, and demands in writing a copy of the complaint, specifying a place within the State where it may be served, a copy must be served within twenty days. (Code § 130.) The defendant caused a notice of appearance to be served by his attorney in this case, and superadded to such notice were the words: "And I require all papers therein to be served on me, at my office, No. 140 Broadway, City of New-York." The plaintiffs treating this notice and requirements as a notice of appearance only, omitted to serve a copy of the complaint, and proceeded to enter judgment. The statute does not require the demand of a copy of the complaint to be made by any particular form of expression, and if, therefore, it be made without reference to the language employed, the defendant secures all the rights consequent thereupon. To demand is to claim; to ask for with authority and to require, is to demand; to ask a thing as of right. The words are synonymous. When the defendant requires all papers to be served upon him, it is demanding that all papers shall be so served. A complaint is a paper in a cause which is necessary to the plaintiff's success, and one which should be served upon the defendant, if he either demand or require it. This is both within the spirit and letter of the statute. The plaintiff's proceedings are therefore irregular, and must be set aside. Leave, however, will be given the plaintiff to serve a complaint within ten days, without costs to the defendant, and without cost of this motion to either party.

DRY GOODS—The movements in this line are becoming quite extensive. Buyers from distant Southern and Southwestern markets are actively inquiring for, and, in many instances, freely purchasing supplies of desirable fabrics, for which satisfactory prices are being obtained. Jobbers have nearly completed their purchases, and are ready to meet the wants of their customers. Holders generally begin the season quite confidently, anticipating a vigorous and successful trade. The principal styles of Cotton Goods—both domestic and foreign—are especially stiffly held, and are in lively request.

FISH—Continue in moderate request, at essentially unchanged quotations.

FLOUR AND MEAL—The market exhibits a fai degree of animation for State and Western Flour, an prices favor sellers. The demand is mainly for hom use, though speculators are making some purchases. Sales have been reported of 11,800 bbls.

Canadian Flour continues scarce and in request, a: $6 15@$6 85 for low to very choice extra, ℔ bbl. Small lots have been sold witnin the range. Southern is brisk and buoyant. Sales have been made of 4,800 bbls. at an advance of 5c.@10c. ℔ bbl., closing at $5 50 @$5 80 for mixed to straight brands; and $5 85@$8 75 for low fancy to very choice extra brands, ℔ bbl. Rye Flour is selling regularly at $3 40@$4 10 for fine to superfine, ℔ bbl. Corn Meal is more sought after at $3 80@$3 90 for Jersey, and $4 15@$4 25 for Brandywine, ℔ bbl. Included in the sales were 300 bbls. Brandywine at $4 15, afloat, ℔ bbl.

GRAIN—Wheat is in demand at full rates. Sales 7,500 bushels, including good white Michigan, at $1 45 @$1 46, and red Southern at $1 35 ℔ bushel. Corn is in fair request, but the high prices generally asked for it tend to restrict operations. Sales have been reported of 18,000 bushels at (nominally) 87c.@88c. for Old sound Mixed Western; 85c. for new white Southern, and 80c. for damp yellow Jersey and Southern ℔ bushel. Rye has not varied. Holders generally ask 90c. and upwards ℔ bushel. A small lot of poor was reported sold at 85c. ℔ bushel. Barley finds ready buyers, chiefly on speculation, at strengthening prices. Sales have been made of 42,500 bushels ordinary to very good State, at 82c.@90c. ℔ bushel. Some holders of prime parcels now claim 95c. ℔ bushel. Oats are sparingly offered, and are in demand at buoyant rates. We quote Canada, 64c.@65c.; Western, 62½c.@64c.; State, 58c.@61c.; Jersey and Pennsylvania, 54c.@57c.; Southern, 49c.@53c. ℔ bushel.

Mr. WM. G. CUTTING notices the week's business in Breadstuffs thus: "The market for State and Western Flour has been very firm, and prices have steadily advanced. The receipts have been moderate, the demand both on speculation and for home consumption has continued good, whilst for export there has been but little inquiry. Holders exhibit no anxiety to realize, confident that prices will continue to improve. The transactions yesterday were to a fair extent, the market closing active and buoyant. Southern Flour has been more active, and prices have advanced. Canadian Flour is scarce, and prices are firmer. Rye Flour has been in better demand, at a slight advance. Corn Meal has been more sought after, and is held firmly. The Wheat Market for the past week has been more buoyant than at any time during the season, and there has been a continued upward tendency in prices, with a good speculative demand. Winter Western Red and Western White have been the most in favor with purchasers; all descriptions, however, have participated in the advance. The demand for home consumption has been somewhat limited, dealers supplying only their immediate wants, whilst the rise in prices has almost entirely prevented inquiry from shippers. Yesterday's transactions were to a moderate extent. Rye is very firmly held, and is in request. Corn has been less active; holders, however, are generally firm. There has been a fair continued speculative demand, with some inquiry from the trade, closing at 85c. for unsound Western Mixed; 86c.@88c. for sound do.; 85c. for Southern White; and 86c.@82c. for Southern and Jersey Yellow. Oats continue active and buoyant, with a good inquiry, both from the trade and on speculation. Barley has been active and in good request, in part on speculation."

HAY—Small sales of North River have been reported to-day at 80c. for shipment, and 95c.@$1 for local use, ℔ 100 lbs.

HIDES—The market is firm. The transactions have been to a fair extent. The trade are not very willing purchases of Buenos Ayres at 27c.; but holders refuse to make any reduction in prices. LEATHER—The demand for Sole is fair, but at drooping prices. The sales exceed receipts. The stock is comparatively small. The week's movements have beenas follows

	SOLE

For London, 150 tcs. Rice, at 25c., and barreled Pork, at 3s. 9d. For Hamburg, Ashes, Cotton and Rice have been engaged to a moderate extent, on terms not made public. From Independence—Arrival of the Santa Fe Mail—Meeting of the New-Mexican Legislature.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

INDEPENDENCE, Tuesday, Jan. 18, 1859.

The Santa Fé mail arrived yesterday. By it we have Gov. RENCHER's Message, which was well received, and is regarded as perhaps the best ever issued from an Executive of the Territory. The Legislature has devoted much of their time to memorials to Congress for various purposes of importance.

Judge NEIGHBORS is anxiously looked for. There has not been a full Supreme bench in New-Mexico for two years, and no regular term in the Taos district for the same time. Nothing is so prejudicial to the interests of the Territory as this. Better be without Executive officers always, than judicial for a short period.

No faith is placed in treaty [stipulations with the Indians, and especially the recent one with Navajos, but if peace is made with them by the Commissioners, of whom nothing has yet been heard, Col. BONNEVILLE will exact strict compliance, and will to the utmost keep them within bounds.

Just as the mail party left Santa Fé, an express arrived from Albuquerque, announcing the safe arrival of FRANK GREEN's party from Neosho, on the 27th December, who were supposed to have been cut off.

Trial of the Staten Island Quarantine Incendiaries.

In the Assembly, on Tuesday last, Mr. JOHNSON of Delaware County, gave notice of his intention to introduce the following bill:

AN ACT IN RELATION TO THE TRIAL OF CERTAIN OFFENCES.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Every criminal offence which has been, or shall hereafter be, committed in the County of Richmond by any person or persons, against, or in any manner affecting, any property, real or personal, situate in said county, belonging to the people of this State, or in any manner held in trust for them by any Board of Trustees, or any public officer or officers, and which may be, or may have been, used or employed, or was intended to be used and employed, in the maintenance of Quarantine, or in the administration of the Health laws of the State, and whereby said property has been, or shall be, injured or destroyed, or whereby an attempt has been or shall be made to destroy or injure the same; and all felonies and misdemeanors, which have been, or shall hereafter be, committed in said county, by any person or persons, against the persons or property of any of the Officers of Health or Quarantine, or of any officer engaged in administering the Health Laws of the State, or against any of the employes at Quarantine, or against any person engaged in guarding, protecting, watching or taking care of any of the property hereinbefore specified, shall be tried in the City and County of New-York, or in the County of Kings, subject to the power of the Supreme Court, on good cause shown, to change the place of trial to some other county.

SEC. 2. Every person who has committed, or shall hereafter commit, any of the offences specified in the preceding section, in said County of Richmond, may be indicted and tried either in the City and County of New-York, or in the County of Kings, in the same manner and with the like effect as if such offence had been committed in the county where said indictment shall be found, and exclusive jurisdiction to entertain complaints for such offences, and to find bills of indictment therefor, and to try the same, is hereby vested in the magistrates and Criminal Courts of the County of Kings and the City and County of New-York; and all provisions of law in regard to the arrest, bailing, indictment, trial and punishment of persons committing offences in said last-mentioned counties, shall apply to every person charged with the commission of any of the offences specified in the preceding section, in the same manner, and with the like effect, as if said offences had been committed in the City and County of New-York, or in the County of Kings.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Europa had not been seen at Sandy Hook at 2 o'clock this morning. She is now in her fourteenth day—having left Liverpool on the 8th inst.

Very little business of public interest was done by Congress yesterday, it being private calendar day in both Houses. In the Senate a memorial was presented praying for an increase of the pay of Naval officers, and a joint resolution was introduced relative to Ocean Mail transportation. In the House Mr. Farnsworth, of Illinois, asked but did not obtain leave to introduce a preamble and resolution looking to the acquisition of the British American Provinces. As it was objected to by Southern members, it was probably considered as an effort on the part of Mr. Farnsworth to throw ridicule on the latest proposition for the acquisition of Cuba.

The grossest frauds, in connection with the Oregon and Washington War Debt, have been brought to light by the House Committee on Military Affairs, through the efforts of Mr. Faulkner, of Virginia, the Chairman. The whole debt, as reported by the Government agents, is about $6,000,000, of which the Committee assert that not more than about one million is justly due. Some of the charges by which this difference is made are most outrageous. Pistols are charged at $55 each; muskets at $125; oats at $5 a bushel; hay at $120 a ton, and other things in proportion. At the last session of Congress, when the debt was first brought to the notice of the Committee, the War Department recommended its payment, but Mr. Faulkner caused action on the matter to be deferred, in order that it might be fully investigated. By this delay and investigation, the somewhat considerable sum of from four to five millions will be saved to the Treasury.

Senator Thomson, of New-Jersey, has been fluttering the Volscians at Trenton, by his discovery of a deep-laid plot, by Senator Seward, to give New-York the use of Sandy Hook for Quarantine purposes. Mr. Seward, it seems, recently introduced a bill into the Senate, authorizing the sale of the property belonging to the United States at Quarantine on Staten Island, and conferring power to the Treasury Department to erect buildings for revenue purposes on any land belonging to the United States, in the neighborhood of New-York, which the Secretary of War may see proper to give up for that object. Now, as the State of New-Jersey had ceded to the United States a certain part of its territory on Sandy Hook, the jealous eyes of the New-Jersey Senator sees in this bill of Senator Seward a design to put the Quarantine buildings on the soil of New-Jersey. But, the Quarantine being a State institution, could have no power in the matter. To prevent the possibility of such a design being carried out, Senator Thomson proposed an amendment to the act, forbidding the erection of a Quarantine anywhere without the sanction of the State within whose borders it was proposed to place it.

Mr. C. C. Walden, formerly Deputy Collector under Mr. Schell, from which position he was removed, as alleged, through the influence of the Hon. Geo. Taylor, in passing the latter gentleman, yesterday, in the vestibule of the House of Representatives, used towards him an opprobrious epithet. Mr. Taylor, ascertaining that the epithet was intended for him, immediately struck Walden with his fist, but the force of the blow was broken by the interference of another person. Walden then struck Taylor with his umbrella, when it was wrenched from him, and he in turn was nearly floored by a blow from it. Further collision was prevented by the bystanders.

The business before the Legislature yesterday was generally of an interesting character. In the Senate, the bill providing for a double track of the Harlem Railroad, and authorizing the use of steam above a certain limit, was reported favorably. A bill was introduced authorizing the construction of a railroad in the Seventh-avenue and other streets of the City, as noticed on Thursday. The Attorney-General was called upon by resolution for his opinion as to the constitutionality of tolling railroads which compete with the canals in the transportation of freight. The resolutions introduced by Mr. Halstead, against any increase of the present rates of postage, were adopted. In the Assembly, a number of bills were reported favorably, among them the one to incorporate the Brooklyn Mercantile Library Association. A remonstrance was presented from the Judges of the Supreme, Superior and Common Pleas Courts, against the repeal of the law allowing parties to suits to be witnesses. Among the bills introduced was one to compel all country banks to redeem their issues at par in this City. The resolution calling for information as to the emoluments of the Sheriff and County Clerk of this City then came up, and after several efforts to amend, it was passed under the operation of the previous question.

From Hayti we have additional advices, apprizing us of the movements of the Imperial troops to Jan. 3. The account, of course, originates with the Government, and is therefore to be taken with caution. It represents the army as being unflagging in its loyalty, and as advancing with ardor upon the rebels, who had already abandoned one important position, which the Imperial forces had occupied. The narrative represents the insurrection at Gonaives as nothing more than a riot.

We give full extracts from California papers, received by the 29th Overland Mail, at St. Louis, on the 18th inst. The San Francisco dates are up to Dec. 24. Our latest California dates are up to Dec. 27, in a telegram from St. Louis, published in yesterday's Times. The intelligence which we give this morning is somewhat interesting, but not specially important.

On Thursday last the new iron steamer built by the Messrs. Winans, of Baltimore, made a short excursion of four or five hours, with a small party on board. The performance of this marine novelty is represented by the Baltimore papers as having been entirely satisfactory. Though but half the steam power was applied to the engine, she made twelve to fourteen miles an hour. But the accounts of the experimental trip which the Baltimore papers give is very indefinite, except as relates to the cheers that were given and the salutes which were fired on the occasion. An experiment of so much interest to the whole maritime world and to men of science ought to have been accurately reported by some competent person.

Sloop-of-War No. 1, the first of the eight new steam-propellers authorized to be built by the last Congress, was launched in Philadelphia on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. No name has yet been given to this vessel, and she is called now Sloop-of-War No. 1.

The warm weather of the past four days continued through yesterday; the wind having changed to the southwest, rain commenced falling about noon and lasted until night. The weather was more like April than January.

Great alarm was excited, a few days since, among the eaters of sausages and ham sandwiches, by reports of a large number of diseased hogs having been sent to our markets from New-Jersey. A similar alarm has now been created among the connoisseurs of mutton chops, and the epicures who delight in saddles of "Southdown," by rumors that whole flocks of scabby sheep have been sent from Dutchess County to satisfy the appetites of New-Yorkers. Poisoned quail and partridges are abundant, but we have heard no complaints in relation to the beef sold in our markets. The rumors in relation to the scab-by mutton have not assumed a very definite shape.

Prof. Mitchell had an audience numbering nearly 3,000 to listen to his third lecture on Astronomy, last evening, at the Academy of Music. The subjects discussed were: "The motions, orbits, and physical characteristics of comets."

One of the officers attached to the Sheriff's Office attempted yesterday the arrest of Mr. Wm. A. Hardenbrook, a Wall-street lawyer, on account of the failure of the latter to obey a summons of the Supreme Court. Mr. Hardenbrook resisted the arrest on alleged legal grounds, and the result was that he and the Sheriff's officer got into a genuine and spirited street altercation. A policeman arrested both of them for fighting, and conveyed them to the City Hall Police Court. Here a spicy scene ensued, which ended in the Deputy Sheriff being victorious, and the Wall-street lawyer being lodged in Eldridge-street Jail.

Several recent cases of interest will be found under the head of Law Reports. Among them is a decision upon a motion to strike out the defence set up in the suit brought by Dr. Blaisdell against the Times. The Court sustains the defence.

The Grand Jury of the Court of General Sessions made a presentment yesterday, in which they refer the large majority of the business which has occupied their attention, to the present unrestricted sale of spirituous liquors, which is in their opinion, the cause of three-fourths of the crime committed in the City. They draw special attention to the evils connected with the present liquor law, and urge instant action of the Legislature and of citizens toward its speedy alteration. They also concurred with the Grand Juries of the two previous terms in presenting Washington Market as a nuisance. Of the trials yesterday in this Court, the most important was that of Edward West and William Miller for highway robbery, who were convicted and sentenced each to ten years and three months in the State Prison, and of Appleton Oaksmith, the publisher, for an assault and battery on an engraver named Coughlan, who had made repeated applications for the payment of a small sum due to him for engraving. Mr. Oaksmith was convicted and remanded for sentence.

The sales of Cotton, yesterday, comprised 3,500 bales, prices closing about ⅛c. ₩ lb. higher. Flour and Barley were actively dealt in at improved rates. Wheat and Corn were quiet. Provisions were less sought after. Groceries were in good request, as were also Whale, Sperm and Linseed Oils, Tobacco, Resin and Hides. Freights were less active.

The Pardoning Power.

Governor Banks has just been making some very sensible observations upon the exercise of the pardoning power, which we cordially commend to the attention of all Governors in other States. He advocates a system of punishments framed in harmony with public opinion—severe enough to deter from crime, but mild enough not to rouse the sympathy of jurors or philanthropists for the criminal. But for the prevention of crime, he relies mainly, and most wisely, not so much on the severity of the penalty as on the certainty of its infliction. If all punishments which public opinion condemns were abolished, and if those sentences once passed, were sure to be carried into execution, he feels satisfied the pardoning power would need to be exercised very rarely, if at all. As these are precisely the views on this subject which we have long been urging in the columns of this journal, we see then the promulgation, by a man whose official position enables him to do a good deal towards carrying them into effect, with much pleasure, and we sincerely hope our own new Governor, who has just commenced trying his hand in the pardoning business, will give them his best attention.

In this State, the difficulty in obtaining convictions is due no less to the incapacity of the Judges than to the qualms of Jurors. Four trials of a murderer for one offence, three having failed, owing to the bad ruling of the Judge, such as occurred in the Cangemi case, is, we believe, something unprecedented in the history either of English or American criminal administration. But the uncertainty as to the infliction of the punishment is probably just as much to blame for the frequency of crime as the faults in our criminal procedure. There appears to be a strong dislike to capital punishment amongst just those classes of the community who are able to devote most time to pestering the Executive for pardons—clergymen, philanthropists and politicians. A man is never sentenced to death in this State, that one or other of these does not make a strong effort to save him; the politicians, of course, with an eye to the next election; the clergymen and philanthropists, partly from pity and partly to acquit themselves of a duty which they feel they owe to their own consciences, and they are, as we know, often successful. All this is a radically bad and unsound state of things. Possibly hanging may not be the best punishment for murder, but as long as it is the punishment prescribed by law, all failures to execute it are so many incentives to crime. If criminals are once familiarized with the idea that the highest penalty attached to an offence will not be inflicted, a boundless field for conjecture as to the chances of escape from all minor ones is at once opened up. Every other risk seems insignificant in comparison with the main one.

Imprisonment for life would be a terrible punishment, worse in many respects than death, if criminals felt satisfied that it would be carried out. But they know perfectly well that, independently of the chance of escape by breaking jail, there is always a strong probability that of the twenty men who occupy the Gubernatorial chair during the life of a robust convict, one of them at least will be pretty sure to exercise the absolute discretion which the Constitution absurdly vests in him, and set the prisoner free. One of the considerations which weighs most with the Executive in these cases, the length of time which has elapsed since the offence was committed—as if the sentence were a mere manifestation of vengeance on the individual, which the lapse of years naturally and properly cooled down, instead of being a warning to those who have not yet committed any offence at all. A sentence of this sort—in order to do its work as a preventive, should be made as irrevocable as Fate itself, and the public should feel that he who entered the murderer's cell entered it forever, and left hope behind him.

The evil which lies at the base of this uncertainty, which encourages so much of our crime, and particularly of crimes against the person, is undoubtedly the large discretionary powers left in the hands of individual officers. Our Judges have far too much discretion in meting out punishment, and their abuse of it opens the door for similar abuse of the discretion vested in the Governor. The system which leaves it in the power of a man like Judge Russell to sentence a poor Irishman—as he has done—to the State Prison for forty years for stealing six cents, and suspend sentence—or, in other words, release—on a shoulder-hitting emigrant runner, guilty of a murderous assault, is almost a caricature on criminal justice. We provide a remedy for judicial enormities of this sort, not by reducing the powers which open the door for them, and by placing poor prisoners under the protection of fixed rules and accurate definitions, but by granting more discretion to another official. We endeavor to correct the abuses of the Courts by giving the Governor power to commit abuses of his own, and it would be hard to say which contributes most to the insecurity of life and property.

Our Diplomatic Agents.

Persons of very vivid imagination may possibly be able to conceive the sentiment of indignation which will pervade the Court and the aristocratic circles of Teheran, when it shall have become known in Persia that the United States decline to be represented in that country by an Ambassador of the first rank. An inevitable impression will afflict the mind of his Highness, the Shah, that America depreciates Persian respectability and power; and he will accordingly feel himself slighted, and his dominions insulted. England has a Minister at Teheran—France is represented in the Persian Capital—Russia has an Ambassador near the same august Court, and all the great European powers manifest towards Persia feelings of consideration and respect which, after the recent vote in Congress, the Shah will scarcely permit himself to suppose are even entertained by the United States. The House of Representatives at Washington, after having duly debated the subject of a first-class mission to Persia, appear to have decided—as Sir Charles Coldstream might have done—that there is nothing in it. There is no money in the transaction, and Brother Jonathan drops it.

While we condole, as sincerely as we can under the circumstances, with our worthy and Herald-patronized President, on the loss of so desirable an opportunity of providing for some political castaway, we must not forget to condole also with the gentleman who would have profited by the appointment, and probably for whose use and behoof it was sought to create the office. For, truly, it would have been a good thing for any unsuccessful political friend of the Executive, from the rural districts of Iowa or Minnesota or anywhere else in the "Great West." It is well known that the duties of American Ambassadors at many of the foreign Courts are tolerably light, while the acquirements necessary to secure such appointments are not brilliant. If the gentleman whom it is desired to invest with the office of foreign Minister is gifted with an easy flow of historical reminiscence and political prognostication, enjoys an intimate personal acquaintance with the American Eagle, and is ready to display all these qualifications on every occasion and at short notice, he has evidently been designed by nature for an American Ambassador.

So far for his acquirements. His requirements are equally simple. He must have at least a couple of suits of clothing, cut rather after the Paris than the Keokuk style. He would want to take with him copies of Lalla Rookh and Sir Wm. Jones's Hafiz, which he could study at his leisure, with a view to post himself thoroughly upon Persian affairs; and he would no doubt also furnish himself with D'Herbelot's Bibliotheque Orientale and Xenophon's Anabasis, which works, as he probably could not read them, would be rather objets de luxe than articles of utility. With these little supplies, our Persian Minister would be completely appointed, and ready to transfer to Teheran the talent and eloquence of which his absence would deprive the political arena of the thriving West. About his knowledge of the Persian language, of Persian history, literature or manners, the appointing Power now established at Washington would, in all likelihood, never deem it necessary to inquire. And, as the Ambassador could earn his salary just as completely without a knowledge of French as with it, he, of course, would not trouble himself to acquire that tongue. There being nothing whatever to do in Persia, the Minister would go out prepared to do it. The hope, however, of a Persian mission, whosoever may have entertained it, appears to be pretty fairly nipped in the bud. Sassanian dignity may feel the affront, and Iowan cupidity may regret the decision; but there appears to be but little chance of an American Embassy in that quarter.

So, also, in regard to the mission to Rome, where the United States have about as much need of a Minister as they might have in Kamschatka. An Embassy in the Eternal City would afford the finest opportunity we know of for Executive patronage of idle gentlemen with those cultivated tastes and refined manners which are the natural results of a life-long devotion to American politics. There is no part of the world in which a man of leisure could more agreeably pass his Winters, or which he could more reasonably leave in the Summer. For, by a remarkable coincidence, there has never been any more business to be done in Rome, when the Chargé has been absent in Florence, (driven thither by his fear of the Pontine Marshes,) than when he has remained under the shadow of the Colisseum. The hope of this Embassy is also cut off in its infancy, and all of the many roads which, as the proverb says, lead to Rome, will be closed to Americans of ambassadorial degree.

The country will, we think, highly approve of these measures. The public purse has been annually burdened with the support of a whole catalogue of foreign missions which have been completely useless in every single particular. We take all occasions to assert that we are purely a commercial people, and that we have nothing to do with foreign politics. We have no trade with Persia; and, to quote a remark recently made in Congress, we import from Rome only a "few rags and essential oils," in exchange for which singular combination Rome takes nothing at all from us. It would, therefore, be difficult to see what advantage is to be gained by keeping Ministers in places, such as Teheran or Rome, where there is actually nothing for Ministers to do. An American Chargé at Teheran may be all very well, and a Consul at Rome would not, perhaps, be amiss; but the dispatch of Envoys Extraordinary to such points would be extravagant because superfluous. They would tend to complicate and disturb rather than to create or foster relations.

We are therefore very glad to see that the two missions which have been named are not likely to be approved of by Congress. We believe, too, that there are several others which might be discontinued with economy and great benefit to the public interests. At the principal Courts where, in consequence of close commercial relations, questions of international policy are likely frequently to arise, it is well that the United States should be represented by gentlemen of talent and capacity in the high position which befits the diplomatic representation of this country. But in other places, there is no necessity to incur more expense than may be needful for the support of minor officers, such as Consuls, or Chargés d'Affaires, who will be quite as efficient, where there is nothing to be done, as the gentleman from Iowa or Minnesota previously alluded to, and to whom the country would have to pay a large sum by way of salary, and another by way of outfit.

Medical Ethics.

The Academy of Medicine has closed its hearing in the case of the professional treatment of the late Mr. S. S. Whitney, and we have given the public the benefit of a full report of its proceedings. It is barely possible that professional men may derive instruction from its perusal, and may be able to reach some correct conclusion as to the scientific propriety of the treatment employed by the two sets of medical men into whose hands Mr. Whitney had the misfortune to fall. It is not our province, at all events, to enter upon this department of the subject. Dr. Beales may, possibly, in one breath, profess utter ignorance of the effect of introducing nitrate of silver into diseased lungs without impairing his professional standing, at a time when ninety-nine out of every hundred reputable physicians in the world have made up their minds on the subject;—or he may in the next breath declare his belief that this practice is always dangerous, without subjecting himself to the charge of gross inconsistency, and still grosser ignorance upon the question. These are matters which, in conformity with etiquette, we suppose we must leave the profession to settle among themselves. But there are certain conspicuous features of this case, as it has been put before the public, which transcend the limits of professional decorum, and are fairly subject to the scrutiny of the public at large. It is a fair question for the whole community, as well as for the Academy of Medicine, to discuss, whether the personal character of any man holding a respectable position before the public, is fair game for the slanders of his professional brethren,—or whether Doctors are amenable to the same laws of decorum and propriety which govern other gentlemen in their intercourse with one another.

Dr. Beales was called to see Mr. Whitney on the 14th of December, and was immediately informed by him, in terms and tones of great excitement, that he had "been operated upon by Dr. Green, and that he had killed him" by puncturing the windpipe with a metallic tube, through which he had injected nitrate of silver into his lungs. Dr. Beales apparently accepted this statement of the case as conclusive, and treated his patient accordingly. He made no examination of the windpipe,—made no inquiries of Dr. Green,—made no attempt to test the truth of the extraordinary assertion of his patient, but on the 15th called in Dr. Mott, and went on treating Mr. Whitney on the assumption of a lesion in the windpipe until the 21st, when he died. During this interval every social circle in New-York had been informed that Dr. Green had perforated the windpipe of Mr. Whitney:—the damning news spread rapidly throughout the whole country:—anxious friends informed the Doctor's patients of the horrible affair,—and it finally found its way into the New-York and Boston newspapers. Drs. Beales and Mott during all this time, permitted this report to pass without contradiction or correction on their part; Dr. Beales has positively asserted that Dr. Mott even aided in giving it currency. Either they did not know it to be untrue, or they did not care whether it was true or false, provided it could be used to Dr. Green's injury. The former supposition is probably the true one; though their subsequent proceedings show that both may have been correct. They held a post-mortem examination, —mainly, as their own report of it proves, to confirm their belief in Whitney's original assertion that his windpipe had been ruptured. Dr. Green was not invited to be present;—he was not even notified that the post-mortem was to take place:—the two physicians who had received, tacitly indorsed and aided in circulating the scandal, with a son of one of them, took sole charge of the proceeding. Why this most extraordinary course was pursued the Doctors themselves do not concur in explaining. At the meeting of the 5th Dr. Mott said it was proposed by them that Dr. Green should be present, but the family would not assent. Dr. Beales at the meeting of the 19th "frankly confessed it was not proposed to the family at all." And we understand that one of the family asserts that he was anxious to have Dr. G. invited, but the other physicians were unwilling. In this state of affairs it is a little difficult to ascertain the truth—but one thing may be fairly inferred, that there was a predetermination somewhere that Dr. Green should not be present. Whether this was in conformity with usage, medical men may know. Whether it was courteous or decent, the public at large will have no difficulty in deciding.

The first result of this post-mortem, even thus conducted, was to discover that there was no laceration, perforation, penetration or even abrasion of the windpipe, at any point, in any manner or by any instrument whatever. "Indeed, we all remarked," says the report of it, "that we had never seen a larynx and trachea more natural and healthy." This exploded, utterly and forever, the intemperate assertion of the excited patient on which these two physicians had been treating the case. The very next step was to cut into an abscess, "as large as a hen's egg," lying back of the pharynx,—which discharged a great quantity of pus,—and the existence of which had never been detected or suspected before, as Dr. Mott himself has since admitted. Without going into the details of the matter further, it is sufficient to say, that by common consent, that abscess, pressing upon the windpipe and causing difficulty and strangulation in swallowing and in breathing, was the cause of Mr. Whitney's death. That its discovery and opening would have saved his life, is rendered probable by Dr. Green's statement that on two occasions he had discovered and opened similar abscesses to the immediate relief of his patients. Why was it not discovered by Drs. Beales and Mott? Were they incapable of making the requisite examination? Or were their minds so preoccupied with the theory which the patient himself had suggested, and so determined to make out a case against Dr. Green, that they made no examination of the throat at all? Whatever the reason may have been, their first step upon discovering the abscess after death, was to charge its existence to the treatment of Dr. Green,—so that upon their own showing it had commenced, grown up and produced its fatal results while the patient was under their care, and had, nevertheless, utterly escaped their observation. It is not at all singular that, under such circumstances, they should find it expedient to discover as many causes of death as possible, and to involve the whole subject in such a degree of confusion as to screen themselves at Dr. Green's expense. They first returned to the City Inspector the cause of Mr. Whitney's death as "effusion into the lungs"—a phrase which both these physicians now admit to be inaccurate—admirably calculated to insinuate a charge against Dr. Green without making anybody responsible for it,—and which they have now the effrontery to say was adopted—false and injurious as it was—from a desire that "nothing should be said that might awaken public feeling or reflect on Dr. Green." And that, too, when the story of the ruptured windpipe had been allowed by them to circulate, without contradiction, through the length and breadth of the country. Judging from his remarks in the Academy, this is a species of kindness which Dr. Green does not appreciate.

"If these gentlemen," said he, "have not reported the true cause of death to the City Inspector, I will not say they have failed in doing their duty, but I will say they would have done it better if they had. I wish to have all the truth brought out, and should be sorry if anything was concealed from delicacy of feeling towards me. I should be glad to have them state the cause of death before the Academy. If they know it, let us have it. Having been accused directly by Dr. Beales of having, by my treatment, caused the patient's death, I wish to have that cause stated, and I pressed the wish to him, inasmuch as I am constantly treating patients in the same way. I have desired him to state to me explicitly in what way I caused his death, and he has declined giving me an answer."

This is not the language of a man uncertain of his position, or anxious to evade the most rigorous scrutiny into his personal and professional conduct. It is the direct, open challenge of a man to his secret slanderers—whom it fails, however, to stimulate or to shame into an imitation of its frankness and its courage.

How the medical profession may view this whole matter we do not know; but the public at large can scarcely fail to detect in its conduct, from beginning to end, the pervading spirit of personal and professional rancor which has been for years the opprobrium of the medical profession. Doctors Beales and Mott are responsible for the original report, adopted recklessly and eagerly from the patient, that Dr. Green had killed him by rupturing his windpipe. They are responsible for not having discovered by a scientific diagnosis the falsity of this report, and the existence of the abscess which was the real cause of death. They are responsible for having made a false return of the actual cause of death to the City Inspector,—for the gross discourtesy of not having invited either Dr. Green or any of his friends to attend the post-mortem examination, which was to convict or acquit him of the serious charge they had brought against him,—and for having insinuated accusations against him for which as scientific men they do not dare to make themselves responsible. And if Dr. Beales states the truth, they are further responsible for the gross indecency of reproaching him for not renewing his calls upon a patient by whom he had been dismissed, and for not intruding upon a family who were ready, according to Dr. Beales himself, to offer him personal violence if he should attempt to do so. The Academy of Medicine may dismiss the whole matter if it chooses to do so; but the intelligent public upon whose notice this case has been pressed, and who have an instinctive love of fair play in every profession and in every walk of life, will hold these gentlemen to this responsibility.

The Question of "The Park."

When the small inclosure that surrounds the City Hall was planted with trees, and laid down in grass, it was called par eminence The Park, it being the only place of the kind within the City limits entitled to that grand appellation. It contained then all the public buildings belonging to the City; the City Hall was flanked on one side by the Bridewell, on the other by the Debtor's Prison, and in the rear was the Alms-House. It seems hardly credible that there are men now living, not much past the middle age either, who can remember when all the City and County buildings, the prisons, alms-house, and public offices, were all located within that very limited area. But such is the fact. Mayor Tiemann can remember that time perfectly well, we have no doubt. The Park might then have been a place of recreation, and our tired citizens may have sought the grateful shade of its trees in the long days of Summer, and have looked out at the Eastern mail coaches as they rolled past up the Bowery to the old "Boston Road," or have watched the lumbering carriages of the wealthy merchants as they retired to their country seats in the neighborhood of Richmond Hill and other rural spots below Bleecker-street, or even as high up as the remote region of Union-square. But all that sort of thing has long since been changed; our City Prisons and Almshouses are now on Blackwell's Island, the public offices are scattered all over the City, miles apart, while the Park remains unchanged, occupying a large space of ground in the most crowded and valuable part of the City, for the sole purpose of preserving a few stunted trees, whose shade nobody seeks, and a few plats of dusty grass, which nobody but a few vagabond boys ever tread upon. Those who occupy buildings, in the immediate neighborhood of the Park, are better judges than any one else can be of the benefits to be derived from its wormy trees and its dusty grass, and they are unanimous in demanding that it shall be thrown open to the public and made a public square, instead of a useless, though we are willing to admit, a rather pretty inclosure. Among our City cotemporaries, the Journal of Commerce, which delights in the purlieus of Coffee-House-slip and Water-street, is the only one, we believe, that "goes in" for keeping the Park intact. It regards the preservation of the few trees in front of the City Hall as of infinitely greater importance than the convenience of the business population of the City. And, oddly enough, a gentleman who lives in Fourth-street, writes us a strong and earnest letter, "indorsing the views" of the Journal of Commerce on this subject, though he differs from our excellent cotemporary on every other subject. Our correspondent says:

"I shudder when I contemplate (to use the mildest language my feelings will allow) your dreadful proposition to cut down the stately and umbrageous sycamore, willow, maple, and other trees, in that time-honored retreat from heat and dust. The woodman's axe that shall desecrate the first one of them, would be more usefully employed buried a thousand feet beneath its roots, and the woodman that shall wield it, might bear it fitting company. The eloquence of a host of Morris's could not appropriately lament so foul a wrong or deprecate so great a shame."

This is both forcible and feeling, we admit; but it strikes us rather remarkable that a gentleman who lives in the immediate neighborhood of so large and lovely a Park as Washington Parade Ground, or who may in a walk of five minutes place himself beneath the branches of the umbrageous ailanthuses in Tompkins-square, which is considerably more than double the extent of the Park, should be solicitous of preserving the latter as a resort for our citizens during the heat of Summer. It is not unlikely that a few persons may find it convenient or agreeable once or twice a year to saunter through the Park, or stop for rest beneath its trees; but where there is one who derives any benefit from the Park there are at least ten thousand persons who are inconvenienced by it. The few, in a case like this, ought to give way for the benefit of the many. The question is hardly worth discussing, the arguments being all on one side, and manifest destiny must inevitably determine the fate of the Park before long. The first step in the right direction has already been taken in the resolution of the Common Council to carry Beekman-street across the lower end of the Park, and it will not be long before Spruce-street and Frankfort-street will extend themselves in a similar manner, and the Park will be among the vanished institutions of this constantly changing Metropolis.

Italy and Sardinia.

Signor and Signora Mario were rather indignant with us for presuming to insinuate that it was advisable for Italians to see whether in the approaching insurrection in Italy some use could not be made of the Sardinian army and Government. We took exceptions to one or two of the lady's statements with regard to the conduct of the Sardinian troops in 1849, and notably to her charge that the Sardinian staff had planned and connived at a defeat at Novara. We also suggested the propriety of overlooking for the present the alleged baseness and treachery of Charles Albert, inasmuch as Charles Albert is dead, and of trying whether Victor Emmanuel could not be turned to some account, inasmuch as he is alive and commands one hundred thousand men. We also protested against debating on the eve of a revolution the comparative advantages of a republican or monarchical form of government, and denied that it was impossible for national independence to be achieved under the flag of a King. We know, as a matter of history, that foreign invaders and tyrants have never been more bravely and more successfully repulsed than under monarchical auspices; and the expulsion of the Austrians we take to be the first want of Italy. We believed then, and believe still, that the capacity of a nation to shake off the yoke of tyrants, and maintain its freedom successfully, depends a great deal more on the character of the people, their good sense, moderation, persistence, and practicability, than on the political theories of their leaders, and that Italy will not prove an exception to the rule.

Signora Mario, however, sees in all this nothing but the scoffing of a secret enemy of the cause she has at heart, and is quite certain that all true Italian patriots, all those, in short, who battled most bravely for Italian freedom in 1848-9, despise and detest our views. The last news from Europe, besides giving fresh interest to this discussion, shows, however, that neither all Italy, nor all the best men of the last revolution are opposed to us in this matter. We believe General Garibaldi has made some stir in Italy, and is tolerably famous both as a patriot and soldier. He, at least, did not run away at Novara, or "sell the people to their tyrants." If our recollection serves us right, he defended Rome against the flower of the French army, in spite of the want of regular fortifications, of good artillery and of disciplined troops, with an ability and pertinacity which has few parallels in the annals of revolutionary warfare. Well, if the Turin correspondent of the London Daily News, who is usually well informed, and whose labors, we believe, Signora Mario once shared, is not on this occasion misinformed, this very Garibaldi, the Garibaldi of 1849, is following the very course which we took the liberty of recommending to the followers of M. Mazzini everywhere, and which we still recommend to all Italian patriots and warriors who happen to be now in this country. In other words, he is actually guilty of the horrible baseness of taking service against Austria under Victor Emmanuel. His crime is set forth by the correspondent aforesaid in the manner and form following:

"The day before yesterday Gen. Garibaldi was summoned from Nice to Turin by a telegraphic message. You are aware that this retired officer enjoys some celebrity on account of his military deeds in Spanish America, but much more for the fine defence of Rome in 1848 against the French, in which exploit he was the chief performer. His principal talent, however, consists in the training and management of guerilla troops. Having long ago broken off all connection with the party and tenets of Mazzini, he has given several proofs of attachment to the Sardinian Government, and being himself a man of action, as the phrase goes, this sudden call to Turin is not devoid of interest. It has come to my knowledge that he was questioned upon two points. First, how, in case of a war, he would set to work to organize and mobilize a national guard. Secondly, how and in what space of time he could raise bodies of volunteers, so as to have ten thousand men ready for the field? Garibaldi has already returned to Nice, where he usually resides, and where he will wait for fresh orders."

Until this information is shown to be a calumny upon this illustrious soldier, we shall take leave to retire from the field, and leave the matter in controversy to be settled between him and his old friends. When he is not ashamed to serve under an Italian flag against the Austrian oppressor, the American people may well be excused if they see better work for Italians to do, than denouncing the traitors of 1848 and preaching confusion to kings.

More Wonders.—The man who discovered a way of extracting sunbeams from cucumbers has suffered a total eclipse. Bonner, of the Ledger, takes his place. He has extracted two or three love poems from Bennett, of the Herald, to say nothing of other literary performances from some of his brethren of the daily press. We presume Bonner's next combination will be an epic poem by Mayor Tiemann, a love story by President Buchanan, and a couple of sonnets by the King of the Sandwich Islands.

PERSONAL.

Baron Pennefather has resigned his seat on the Irish Bench. The venerable Judge (who was called to the Bar in 1795) has recently been in a very infirm state of health. For some years he has been deprived of sight, but his wonderful memory enabled him to discharge his judicial duties efficiently, and in later years some of the heaviest property causes have been tried by him. The Solicitor-General, it was supposed, would succeed him.

The Rev. Mrs. Antoinette Brown Blackwell has reappeared as a lecturer and clergywoman at Rochester. Since her marriage she has been little in public life. Previous to that event she officiated as the pastor of a Congregational Church at Butler, Wayne County, N. Y.

Mr. G. Adams, we (London Critic) are told, is engaged on a model for a marble statue of General Napier, for St. Paul's; and, remembering the one in bronze at Charing-cross by him, we certainly do not look forward very hopefully.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

EBENEZER'S SUFFERINGS—HIS OPINION OF NEW-YORK AND ITS THEATRES.—The first time we had the pleasure of seeing Ebenezer since we left that glorious old State, which, although it does not tax strangers for riding on its rails, owes no man a penny, and has well supported Common Schools, was on that memorable Monday on which the thermometer stood 11° below zero. We hardly knew him. At a time when our treasurers were constructed with a disregard of quantity, that afforded entire freedom of extension to the extreme limit of our Manifest Destiny, Ebenezer was called "old Eb." by all the boys in our town; and was noted chiefly for the redness of his nose, which was all the more noteable from being of the ornate pump-handle order. The peculiar red was what is known in Connecticut as apple-brandy, inlaid with a fair article of Santa Croix, and polished with New-England rum—liquids which Eb always contended (and does to this day) are good for rheumatism and to keep the hair from falling off. But on the Monday on which we saw him, his nose was a pure white. He had been standing looking at an announcement of "Our American Cousin" until he had frozen it. Recognizing Eb. at a glance, notwithstanding the marked change in the color of his proboscis, we approached him, and while extending one hand for a shake, pointed with the other to his nose, and at the same time informing him of its condition. He recognized us immediately, but did not utter a word. The difficulty was apparent—he couldn't. His nose—the only medium through which Ebenezer was ever known to communicate his thoughts to the world—was frozen; and Eb. was too true a son of New-England to violate one of its most general and time-honored usages. We knew that we should get no news from Eb. unless we first thawed out his nose. Snow is generally considered the best agent for that purpose, but in the case of Eb. there was great delay to be apprehended. We knew perfectly well that the nose of Ebenezer had been under the influence of a coutinuous "heated term" for many years—so long, in fact, as to warrant the belief that nothing as cold as snow would ever bring it back to its original usefulness and splendor. Snow was clearly out of the question as a remedial agent, so we tried an internal application of apple-brandy and an outward application of New-England. The effect was all that the most fastidious could desire. Slowly, but surely, the nose of Ebenezer assumed its accustomed hue. From faintest tint (the first promise of success) the hue deepened gradually until the polished red of our remembrance permeated the entire nasal organ, and Ebenezer sat before us, as he had stood in the days of our boyhood. The very instant his nose glistened, he extended his hand and, addressing us through his accustomed medium, said: "How de deu? Why, how you've grown! Wouldn't believed it. But it's you, sartin sure! Knew you soon's I clapped an eye on you, if my nose was froze,—knew you by your dad." We congratulated Ebenezer on the return of his power of speech, and as he said he would remain in town a few days, left him, after he had spoken irreverently of our weather, with a promise to see him again. As we were leaving, he remarked that he had seen as cold weather before, but never when he didn't know where to get a little of the "original" to keep it out; and he couldn't stand foreign spirits. It was several days before we saw Ebenezer again, and then the weather was unusually mild and fair for the season. He thought he couldn't stay as long as he had at first intended, because if such weather continued, something could be done in the way of Winter ploughing. We saw him again yesterday, while it was raining, and he had determined to take the first train. He was covered with mud to the knees, and expressed the opinion that New-York was the dirtiest, nastiest, big town he had ever been in. As he was leaving us he expressed a desire that we would not mention the accident to his nose, as it might injure his reputation at home, where he had for years maintained without opposition, that apple-brandy was a "standing color."

THE PARK FOUNTAIN.—Councilman CORNELL has some peculiar ideas with reference to the removal of nuisances. Thursday evening he presented to the Board, over which he presides with so much dignity and partiality, resolutions directing the removal of the Park Fountain to Madison Square. Did he intend to call for the transfer of the mud-hole itself? Some of his Irish constituents would be glad to know by what process that feat would be accomplished. If he considers that the marble and iron surroundings constitute the traditional "Park Fountain," there is a question whether it would be worth while to erect a monument to that institution of so expensive a character; for the mere transfer of these materials would undoubtedly cost more in the end than the construction of an entirely new fountain. Until the fountains can be kept in better order, there will be no propriety in adding to their number or even in perpetuating those which we now have. The proceedings of the Board the same evening on which these resolutions were offered, revealed a strange physical weakness in its presiding officer. The voice of a solitary full-blooded Democrat sounds sweeter and fuller in his ears than the united "yeas" of all the Republican members. When a viva voce vote was taken on a trifling amendment offered by some Republican to a resolution before the House, Mr. CORNELL could not decide whether the amendment was lost or carried, until the Clerk had called the roll, when the vote stood 22 in favor, to one against. Such obstinate partisanship as this destroys all the confidence which every presiding officer should desire to have placed in him.

SONS OF THUNDER.—The Rev. J. B. WAKELY delivered a lecture, last evening, at the Second street Methodist Episcopal Church, between Avenues C and D, entitled "Sons of Thunder." James and John in Holy Writ, he said, were called "Boanerges," which literally meant "Thunderers," "Sons of Thunder." He dwelt upon the history of the Apostles, and examined the characteristics which had entitled them to the appellation. They had had successors in all ages who were Sons of Thunder—a peculiar class of ministers, who were useful in the sphere of their duties as the Apostles had been in theirs. They differed from the "Sons of Consolation," an appellation which belonged to such workers as Barnabas was, to whom the term was originally applied. The Sons of Consolation dwelt on the bright side, and exhibited the benefits of doing good. The Sons of Thunder dwelt on the terrors of God's violated law, and labored to impress their hearers with the evils which followed sin. The lecturer applied on this theme, which he frequently illumined with humorous anecdotes of clergymen who endeavored in vain, with loud talking and undue physical activity in the pulpit, to induce the belief that they were "Sons of Thunder." The discourse was entertaining, and the audience, which was quite large "in spite of the weather," seemed well pleased with it.

THE CONDITION OF THE CITY HALL—ACCIDENT TO A MAYOR'S CLERK.—The public is by this time pretty generally aware that the City Hall has been without any sufficient covering ever since the fire, and that every rain-storm does serious injury to the carpets and furniture of the various offices. But it was not until yesterday that any persons occupying rooms on the first floor were interfered with. During the rain, Mr. ARCULARIUS, one of the Mayor's Clerks, was occupying his desk, in the southwest corner of the room, when he thought he felt some one touch him on a little bald place on the top of his head, "with a cold finger." He shivered, and, looking up in anticipation of seeing the skeleton that carries a scythe, he barely escaped another, of several drops of water that had passed through the floor of the room of the Board of Aldermen.

THE POOR ON FIVE POINTS.—During the late very severe weather, the suffering among the poor people at the Five Points has been excessive—as great as at any time last season. The demands upon the charity of the several institutions were never more pressing than now. The attendance at the schools of the Five Points House of Industry has been larger this year than heretofore, averaging 275 to 300 pupils daily. The Sunday Schools and Temperance-meetings have also been well attended. During last month, 5 500 meals were provided in the House, at a cost of $137 50. The family of the House numbers at this date one hundred and fifty. We are requested to state that Mr. HORACE GULICK has been employed to collect donations for the Institution, which is at present very much in need of funds.

SCABBY MUTTON FOR NEW-YORK.—The unpleasant fact has just been developed—it is to be hoped that the stomachs of mutton eaters will not be in the least disturbed by the announcement—that within the past few weeks the carcases of 1,200 diseased sheep have been sent to this market from Dutchess County. A disease called the "scabs," it appears, has seriously affected the flocks of the Dutchess County farmers. As fast as the disease made its appearance, the unfortunate victims were killed, divested of their pelts, and the diseased carcases hurried on to Gotham. The police have had their attention called to the fact, and it is to be trusted that a searching investigation will be made. There have been no arrests yet.

YOUNG MEN'S DEMOCRATIC GENERAL COMMITTEE.—An adjourned meeting of the above Committee was held last evening at the Mercer House, but there was not a large attendance, owing to the storm. After the organization there was some discussion touching the proceedings of last meeting of the General Committee at Tammany Hall, and a series of resolutions were offered, sustaining the action of the body. They were finally laid on the table, and shortly afterwards the Committee adjourned.

THE POLICE AND THE POLICE LAW.—The understanding that Senator MATHER intends to press the question of the repeal of the Metropolitan Police Law, during the present session of the Legislature, creates some little uneasiness among the Policemen, although, generally, they feel confident that the most that will be done will be to amend it in such particulars as will not deprive them of their situations, nor disturb their present salary.

QUARANTINE MATTERS.—The appointment by the Governor of Ex Governor SEYMOUR, Ex-Lieut.-Governor PATTERSON and Mr. JOHN C. GREEN, of Staten Island, Commissioners for the removal of Quarantine, was much talked of yesterday among the merchants, and the feeling was generally favorable. It was believed that the appointment of Mr. GREEN, who is a New-York merchant, would be satisfactory to the people of Staten Island.

Police Reports.

ARREST OF A WALL-STREET LAWYER—HIS LODGMENT IN ELDRIDGE-STREET JAIL.—Mr. A. Hardenbrook, a Wall-street lawyer, was summoned to appear as a witness in a suit before the Supreme Court, which summons he disregarded. Henry Draper, a Deputy Sheriff, was armed with a process with which to arrest Mr. Hardenbrook. The representative of the Sheriff's Office met Mr. Hardenbrook yesterday afternoon at the corner of Broadway and Wall-street, and politely told him that he (Mr. H) was his prisoner. Mr. Hardenbrook informed the Sheriff's deputy that fortunately for himself he was just returning from an examination before a referee, and that the Statutes placed it out of his power to arrest him. The officer intimated a positive aversion on his part to discuss any legal points, and insisted that Mr. Hardenbrook should forthwith accompany him to the Eldridge-street jail. Mr. Hardenbrook refused to go. The officer insisted upon Mr. Hardenbrook's going. Words passed between the two, and soon blows. Policeman Tuthill saw the hostile sparring and immediately arrested both parties, took them before Justice WELSH, and preferred a charge against them for disorderly conduct. Mr. Hardenbrook explained matters to the magistrate,—quoting the Statutes referred to—and asked to be discharged. The Deputy-Sheriff also explained matters to the magistrate, and asked to be allowed to proceed with his prisoner to Eldridge-street jail. It was a nice point, and the Justice asked time to consider it. At this time Deputy Sheriff Vultee entered the room, and to him, Mr. Dreher, his associate deputy, instantly appealed for advice. The advice of Mr. Vultee was laconic but decisive, in the words following, to wit: "Go ahead, take your prisoner to Eldridge street jail." Officer Dreher essayed to go ahead, taking Mr. Hardenbrook by the collar. Mr. Hardenbrook essayed to stay behind, planting his right fist firmly under the left ear of the Deputy-Sheriff Dreher. Mr. Vultee rushed in to the assistance of his associate officer. Mr. Hardenbrook importuned the assistance of the magistrate, and the magistrate remarked: "I have no power." In the twinkling of an eye, Mr. Hardenbrook was pulled from the Court-room into the hall. Officer Dreher did "go ahead," assisted by Mr. Vultee, and the twain lodged Mr. Hardenbrook in Eldridge-street Jail, where he slept last night.

VICTIM OF THE SHANGHAE GAME.—Daniel McConnell, a youthful and sturdy son of Erin, on the evening of the 17th of March last, went on a tour through the Water-street dance houses with Luke Quinn. The youthful Celt drank a large quantity of Water-street rum, the effect of which was to make him oblivious. The next morning, as he recovered consciousness, he found himself on board the ship N. B. Palmer, and on the "wide, wide sea." He was immediately put before the mast, and compelled to work, until the return of the vessel to this port, yesterday forenoon. Directly following his arrival, he made complaint before Justice WELSH against Thomas Hadden, for having spirited him on shipboard—a spiriting process designated the "Shanghae game." He accuses Hadden of being the spiritual agent, because the latter's name appears in the written agreement upon which he was compelled to perform involuntary sailor's duty. The accused was arrested, and a hearing assigned for to-day in the case.

BURGLARY.—The dry-goods store of Geo. Keyes, No. 343 Eighth-avenue, was entered by burglars at 5 o'clock Thursday morning, and about $500 worth of plain and fancy silks stolen therefrom. A neighbor living on the opposite side of the street, perceiving the operations of the burglars, crossed over, when he was assaulted by one of the party, who struck him on the head and threatened to shoot him. Becoming frightened, he left the ground, and the burglars, fearing detection soon after followed suit. There were three men in the party, besides one who sat in a wagon on the corner of the street, which was in waiting to receive the stolen goods. A large haul was evidently intended, as the store is well stocked with goods. A gentleman passing the store soon after the burglars left, saw the door open, and took possession, which he kept for an hour and a quarter before a policeman made his appearance. A man named Davis has been arrested on suspicion of being one of the burglars, but none of the stolen property has been recovered.

THE UPHAM WIFE ABANDONMENT CASE.—The examination in this case was resumed yesterday before Justice WELSH. Several witnesses were examined for the defense. Mrs. Mary J. Curtis and a son and daughter, who occupy the house in New-Haven, Conn., owned by Mr. Upham, alleged that in April last Mr. Upham called on Mrs. Upham, and endeavored to persuade her to a reconciliation with him, and offered to take her to New-York and support her in comfortable style. Mr. U. was received by Mrs. Upham with a decided rebuff, and ordered to leave the house, which he did. Mr. Bradley, a New-Haven Assessor, stated that the house referred to by the previous witness was recorded in the Registry Office in Mrs. Upham's name, and that the latter paid the taxes. The further examination was postponed till next Friday morning.

CANDIDATE FOR SING SING.—John Mullen is seventeen years of age, and a premium sample of Sixth Ward youths of his age and proclivities—his proclivities being, unfortunately, an undue fondness for other people's property, and fighting. Mary Akins, a feminine resident of Baxter-street, called the youthful Mullen a "dirty thief." Mullen retaliated by intimating that she was no better than she should be, and followed up the intimation by stabbing her with a knife, inflicting a serious wound. John was arrested and locked up in the Tombs. He expressed himself greatly disgusted at his failure to make a finishing job of his female vilifier. The injured woman was taken to the City Hospital, for medical attendance.

A DISHONEST DOMESTIC.—Harriet Howard, a female of Ethiopian extraction, has for some time past been employed as cook in the family of James Davison, No. 16 Howard-street, where she did very well for a time, until, as is alleged, she assumed unwarranted guardianship over the gold watch, gold chain and wearing apparel of her employer, and ran away with the property in her possession. Mr. Davison objected to such liberties with his property, and had her arrested. She was locked up to answer.

Coroner's Inquests.

A CHILD FOUND IN A SEWER.—The dead body of a female child was found yesterday morning in a sewer in Grand-street, not far from the Bowery. Coroner SCHIRMER held an inquest. A medical examination showed that the child was still-born, and a verdict was thus rendered. No information could be obtained as to the parentage of the deceased infant, or who placed it in the sewer.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

THE BURNING ACCIDENT ON HAMILTON-AVENUE.—The fact that MRS. JANE ANN DAWSON was badly burned in a house on Hamilton-avenue, near Van Brunt-street, was stated in the TIMES yesterday. She died of her injuries Thursday night. A little while before her death she reiterated her statement that she believed her husband, PATRICK DAWSON, had set fire to her clothes. The statement, though not generally believed to be true, rendered it necessary for Coroner HORTON to issue his warrant for the arrest of the accused, and he is now in jail awaiting an examination. Yesterday Coroner SNELL took charge of the case, impanelled a jury who viewed the body, and then adjourned till Tuesday next. The accused is a laboring Irishman, about 40 years old. The deceased was about 30 years old, and leaves behind her four children—two boys and two girls—the oldest eight years, and the youngest fifteen months. These have been taken in charge by the Superintendents of the Poor, and by them sent to the Home for the Homeless, at Flatbush, where they will be better cared for, probably, than they ever were before. The quarters occupied by these miserable creatures is the rear part of an underground basement in a three-story brick building on Hamilton-avenue, near Van Brunt-street, directly opposite the market. An entrance to this place is gained through a narrow hall-way from the street, as filthy as dirt can make it; down a flight of stairs and back through another narrow passage way, both equally as filthy as the first, with the addition of a few extra stenches, which partially prepares the visitor for an entrance to the residence of this family. The first step inside their room reminds you of crossing a mud-puddle on a thin board, by the filthy water that is ejected over your boots and clothes by the weight upon it. A sickening sight is here presented. The room is 5 feet 8 inches in the clear, lighted by two holes in the wall opening into a damp area-way. Windows there are none—they have been broken out by the father and mother in their drunken orgies. The wooden shutters are left, which help to keep out the cold. In one corner of this room is the frame of a bedstead—under it a straw mattrass; a broken chair, a dilapidated table, a cooking-stove in the fire-place, two tin spoons and a broken plate complete the entire list of furniture in the room. In this place six human beings have lived for the last two months—four of them helpless children, and the adults equally helpless most of the time from the use of ardent spirits. On Wednesday night last they were both in this condition. Late at night the other residents in the house heard the screeches in the basement, and thought the father and mother were fighting as usual, and paid no particular attention to it until the cry of fire was raised. The miserable woman was then found in the hall-way leading to the street, and attempting to crawl up stairs—her clothing all on fire. Here she received the first assistance, but it was too late. There was scarcely a square inch upon her body that was not blistered, when taken to the Hospital, where, after suffering for about twenty hours, death came to her relief.

THE DARBY'S PATCH CASE.—Coroner HORTON, with a Jury, held an inquest, yesterday, on the body of WILLIAM DONOHUE, who died from injuries received while intoxicated in Darby's Patch, in the Tenth Ward, Monday night last. The Jury rendered a verdict that the deceased died from concussion of the brain, caused by a blow given by PATRICK RYAN. The accused is an overgrown boy, 19 years old, and has not been seen since last Tuesday. The deceased was 29 years old, a laborer, and leaves a widow and two children.

BURGLAR ARRESTED.—A young man who gives his name as GEORGE SMITH, was arrested by private watchman OSWALD, in the Third Precinct, early yesterday morning, under suspicious circumstances. Upon examining his person he found a silver cup, valued at $35, which, as was subsequently ascertained, had just been stolen, with other property, from the house of the Rev. E. L. TAYLOR, No. 329 Henry-street. The accused was fully committed to answer.

FIRES.—There were two fires Thursday night near 12 o'clock, neither of which resulted in much loss, owing to the fact that there was an abundant upply of Ridgewood water to be had. The first fire was at No. 381 Fulton-street, and the last was on Concord near Bridge-street.

RAPE.—Two youngmen named JOHN and ABRAHAM COOK have been arrested in the Eastern District on a charge of committing an outrage upon the person of an 11-iot girl who resides on Bushwick-avenue, near Grand-street. The case will be examined before Justice FOX.

IN TROUBLE.—A colored gent, named GEORGE H. COMBS, who boards at St. James Hotel, New-York, and occasionally serves those more fortunate than himself, was brought before Justice VOORHIES, yesterday, on a charge of bigamy. It appearing that he had three wives, he was locked up for examination.

FIRE AT ISLIP, LONG ISLAND.—The store and dwelling of Mr. E. R. DUYREA, of Islip, Long Island, was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday morning. Mr. DUYREA was insured for $5,000 on his goods, and $2,500 on the building.

DIRECT TRADE BETWEEN OUR UPPER LAKES AND EUROPE.—During the past two years ten vessels, with a total tonnage of 3,600 tons, were built at Cleveland, Ohio, and freighted by merchants of that city for English ports, their cargoes being chiefly staves and black walnut lumber. They all disposed of their freight to advantage, and six returned with cargoes of crockery, bar iron, pig iron, or salt. The return cargoes were also profitable. The other four vessels did not return to the Lakes, but are engaged in Ocean navigation. The cost of the round trip is estimated from $3,000 to $4,000. The enterprise, it is said, will be continued. Detroit and Chicago have sent vessels to Europe. The route is through the Welland Canal, Lake Ontario, the Lachine Canal, and the St. Lawrence.

There are shad at Savannah, green peas at St. Augustine, and yellow fever at Tampa.

METROPOLITAN CHARACTER OF NEW-YORK.

—That our City is truly the Metropolis of America no one can doubt, if at all acquainted with its resources, and superiority of its magnificent hotels, naval marine, its fleet of ocean steamers, and its business, enterprise and energy. Here the highest talent and acquirement find ample scope and the largest remuneration. Science, literature, art, the drama, law, divinity, surgery, medicine, parade their proudest names. We have at times proposed to introduce to our readers some of the names most distinguished in these several departments, many of whom, beside a local, have a world-wide renown, and whose reputation attracts thousands to be instructed, entertained and benefited. Among them is Dr. S. S. FITCH. This gentleman is one of a line of celebrated physicians. His grandfather, Dr. ABEZ FITCH, renowned for his piety, learning, and skill in surgery and medicine, was one of the surgeons of the Connecticut line during the Revolutionary War. His father, Dr. CHAUNCEY FITCH, was the first physician that settled in Plattsburg, in this State, and for the greater part of his life was one of the most successful physicians that ever practiced medicine in America. In the great epidemic of 1813—an epidemic that swept away nearly ten per cent. of the population of the United States, he taught its easy and perfect cure, and among his numerous patients never lost a single case. Dr. S. S. FITCH is the third of this line, and was born in Plattsburg. He, after receiving an excellent academical and classical education, repaired to Philadelphia, at an early age, to complete his medical education. There he graduated in medicine, obtaining the highest honors of his class. He spent about ten years in Philadelphia, closely and carefully pursuing his studies, after which he visited all the States of this Union, and many of the Indian tribes. In 1835, he visited Europe, and during six years much of his time was spent in the hospitals of London, Paris and Italy. In 1846, he commenced delivering his celebrated lectures on the causes and cure of consumption and other diseases, on the laws of life, showing by obvious and easily understood rules, how human life may be extended to at least a hundred years. His lectures won all hearers by their truthfulness, common sense, and utility. In 1846, Dr. FITCH visited this City, and published his lectures on these subjects, which met with wonderful success. They inspired confidence, joy, hope and courage among their readers and circulated largely both in this country and in Europe. These Lectures have passed through over twenty editions; between one and two hundred thousand copies have been already sold. To invalids, as well as those in the enjoyment of health, they prove a perfect guide: and those who early adopt their teachings, and follow them, cannot fall victims to that scourge of our climate—pulmonary consumption. In this City, Dr. FITCH has been consulted by over fifty thousand persons, of both sexes, for numerous and various diseases. He differs greatly from others in his view of a physician's duty, as he thinks every member of this important profession should prepare and administer his own medicines; that unless he does this, he can not, though he may enjoy reputation, meet with the success he could attain by this means. He writes out an exact and careful account of every case that falls under his notice. These cases already exceed fifty thousand, filling more than one hundred large volumes, all carefully written out. No record of such extent was ever made before by a private physician and in this way he retains his experience, and daily adds to it. An examination of these volumes will show that of all those who place themselves under his care, nineteen out of twenty are restored to health. Dr. FITCH is at home from morning till night, every day, except the Sabbath. His consultations, at his house, are always free, as no charge whatever is made for examining any case for rich or poor. The diseases he treats are Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, Heart Diseases, Dyspepsia, Bowel Troubles, Piles, all Female Diseases, Liver Complaints, Affections of the Head, Skin Diseases, and all Humors and Impurities of the Blood, Scrofula, Injuries to the Complexion &c., &c. Dr. FITCH resides at No. 714 Broadway, where all invalids will find him a most skilful, sympathizing and generous physician. We think our friends who call on him will find this a true history of one of our most respectable men.

We are authorized to add that a copy of "Dr. Fitch's Six Lectures," above referred to, will be sent by mail, post paid, to any person desiring to have them, who will send his or her address to the author; and the price, 50 cents, may then be remitted to him after the book is received and approved of. Address Dr. S. S. FITCH, at his office, No. 714 Broadway, New-York, giving name, Post-Office, County and State. It may be had on the same terms by applying at his office as above. It is a bound volume of 375 pages, 25 illustrations, and explains the method of treatment he has found to be successful in preventing and curing Consumption, and the other diseases on which it treats, with most valuable directions for preserving health.

FOR NORFOLK, CITY POINT AND RICHMO

PROF. MITCHEL ON ASTRONOMY.

THE LAWS, STRUCTURE AND STABILITY OF THE PLANETARY SYSTEM.

Prof. MITCHEL delivered the second lecture of his course on "Astronomy" on Wednesday evening, in the Academy of Music. The building was filled with an audience larger, if possible, than that which was in attendance Friday evening. Among the well-known citizens who occupied seats upon the stage were the Rev. Dr. A. D. SMITH, the Rev. Sr J. PALMR, the Hon. LUTHER BRADISH, who introduced the lecturer, and others. An invitation had been extended to the inmates of the Institution for the Blind to attend last evening, and as it was supposed they could see as well from the third tier as from the parquet, that portion of the house was reserved for their accommodation. Some disorderly boys found their way into the upper circles, and gave some practical illustrations of the theory of projectile forces, by pelting the lecturer, the reporters, and then the audience, indiscriminately, with all varieties of missiles—pieces of slate-pencils, peas, &c., &c. In his lectures Prof. M. completely ignores the use of diagrams and orreries. Imaginary lines are sometimes drawn on the desk behind which he stands. At times he makes use of a cane, which is generally at hand, but his main reliance is upon the descriptive powers of language. That, however, is so graphic, and at the same time so simple, that a child can comprehend the meaning of every sentence. There is an incident told of Prof. M. which illustrates very happily this characteristic of his lectures. Some years since he was delivering an astronomical course in one of the Western cities. Then, as now, crowds gathered to hear him. One evening he was speaking of the distances of the different planets from the sun. The Professor had climbed from Mercury to Saturn and Uranus, and then at one leap he brought his computations to Sirius and the fixed stars. The vast audience were listening intently. Immediately in front of the lecturer sat a young lad some ten or twelve years old, and as Prof. M. reached the climax of his calculations, telling of the years it would take light, traveling with inconceivable velocity, to come from one of those remote worlds to the sun, the boy, overwhelmed with the magnitude of the conception, broke out with a prolonged "Whe—w!" which, in the universal stillness, was heard in every part of the room. Of course the house was brought down, not less by the Professor's eloquence than by this involuntary testimony to its perfect simplicity.

Wednesday evening Prof. M. was laboring under a severe cold. After apologizing for any indistinctness of enunciation which the audience might detect, he proceeded to say that when we behold the configuration of the fixed stars and the mighty constellations traversing on the right hand and the left, we ask Is there any law which governs their movements? It is not necessary that there should be fixed laws, for who can tell those which govern the movements of the storms which sweep over the earth? We announced at the last lecture that there were such laws, and we find a system of worlds which own allegiance to a central sun. Now, Can we trace each one of these revolving orbs? Are we able to roll back the tide of Time, and looking out from any stand-point which we may select, see what was the configuration of those revolving worlds long ages since? and can we lift the veil which hides the future, and see what places other planets will occupy in the centuries to come? It has been done, and it can be done. The great law of gravitation, as before announced, is that every particle attracts every other particle with a force directly as the mass and inversely as the square of the distance. When the laws of motion are known, we can, with the aid of infinitesimal analysis, predict the orbit and give the place of any planet at any time. This analysis rises far above geometry in its power. Now, assign to the sun a given weight. Suppose a planet located at a known distance from it. If a given impulsive force, whose direction is known, be applied to the body, the orbit in which the planet would circulate around the sun can be calculated. The orbit may be a circle, it may be an ellipse, a parabola or a hyperbola, but such is the perfection of the balance of these forces that the body will pursue the same identical track century after century. Could there be golden rings hung up in space, so that these bodies could revolve inside of them without contact, year after year and age after age, these bodies would go on in these same circles. Now let us ask whether these laws in reality are such that they keep the planets at fixed distances, and in certain orbits. 36,000,000 of miles from the sun we come to Mercury, then to Venus, then to the Earth, then to Mars, at 250 millions to the Asteroids, still multiplying in the most wondrous manner under the power of the telescope. Still deeper in space we come to Saturn, with its rings and moons, the most wondrous of the bodies revolving around the sun, preserving in all its parts such a delicate balance as to astound the finite mind of the observer. How are all these worlds located in space? What are their quantities of matter? Are they revolving harmoniously around the centre, or are they creating disorders which will finally wheel off the sun into space, until it becomes a wandering star which shall be consigned to the blackness of darkness forever? [Applause.] The laws which have been discovered and demonstrated by protracted investigation prove that this can never be the case. Prof. M. then described, by imaginary diagrams on the desk in front of him, the respective movements of the Earth, the Sun, and the Moon, and the influence they exerted on each other. The interior planets were then supposed to be added, and then the exterior—at each step the problem becoming more and more complicated; then ten thousands of comets plunging down to mortal view from the depths of space, and then returning to the place from which they came, but all leaving their effects behind them. Does it not seem impossible that calculation should reach these different complications? Yet it is so. Now, take two or three well-known facts. Look at the records of the Chaldeans, at those of the Babylonians, and at those of the other astronomers of ancient times. All tell the same story. All show that the Moon is revolving with constantly accelerated velocity. Now, is this to continue? If so, the doom of the planetary system is fixed. Millions of years may intervene, but finally all will be swallowed up by the Sun. The supposition is staggering, but the conclusion is inevitable. For a long time men hesitated to grasp the problem, but finally a genius arose who solved it. LAPLACE showed that the Earth's orbit was changing. Its longer axis oscillates in certain limits, but every movement affects the Moon, the Earth seizing it in its grasp more and more firmly, and constantly increasing its velocity. But finally the oscillations of this axis shall reach the limit God has assigned it, and then the Earth's orbit again changing, the Moon will resume its former course; thus, like a mighty pendulum hung up in the heavens, beating with its gradual changes the seconds of eternity. [Applause.] A child takes in its hands a few pounds weight; I can lift still more, and another and a stronger man can manage more than I; but God takes worlds in his grasp, and balances them delicately against one another. Do not these investigations border on the profane? No! God has let down this golden chain, and man, grasping link after link, searches out those secrets only which God has permitted him to investigate. Professor M. then stated that there was no orbit permanently fixed; that all were gradually changing. None of these variations affect in the least degree the well-being of the planets. All these planes, some of them mighty millions of miles in diameter, are slowly rocking up and down in space, all combining with one another, so that no derangement can result. Another element must be taken into consideration—that is, the weight of the different planets. Could I grasp Jupiter and bring it down to the orbit of Venus, sweeping that planet out to Jupiter's place, everything would be thrown into confusion. The periodic times, too, must be exactly measured, or there would be an endless cause of derangement. We find that the guarantee of these conditions of stability is absolutely perfect—vibrating backwards and forwards in their mighty periods, the planets all controlled by the same omnipotent power. Now, how are we to account for all this complexity? There was a time when human intellect, looking at the cycles and epicycles with which Omnipotence had scribbled over the heavens, said: "If I had been in existence when God created the universe I could have given him some advice." Shall we dare to say so now? Prof. M. then alluded to the effects of centrifugal force, in giving the planets the form of oblate spheroids, and showed how the Earth had been affected by it. It keeps the ocean, said he, in the same bed where it lay when God shut it in with the bolts and bars of His Omnipotence, and said: "Thus far shalt thou go, and no further." Let the Earth hasten or retard its revolution, and another deluge would devastate it. Thousands of years ago the old astronomers discovered that the star which once fixed the pole, and which guided the traveler across the desert, did not remain in the same place. The pole is revolving around a certain point in the heavens. Professor M. explained how this was effected, by the action of the Moon and the Sun, tipping the equator up and down in its revolutions, and concluded as follows: With one hand on the Sun, and the other reaching out to Uranus, the perturbations of that planet were perceived. So distant was it, that human vision, with eagle glance, could not reach it. But this analysis told man that yonder, in that mighty void, was yet another star, and directing his telescope to the spot which Science pointed out, another world was revealed. [Great applause.]

THE MOTIONS, ORBITS AND PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS OF COMETS.

Hardly any one but Professor MITCHEL could have drawn a respectable audience from their homes last evening. Despite the rain which came down in torrents, the Academy of Music was comfortably filled in every part. The Hon. LUTHER BRADISH introduced Professor MITCHEL, who proceeded to deliver the third lecture of his course, the subject being, "The Motions, Orbits and Physical Characteristics of Comets." He said that in the examinations which have been made thus far of the systems revolving around the central sun, we have found the different bodies moving in orbits almost circular. Science directing the telescope can point it to any star man may desire to observe. He knows that none of these planets can clash with one another; but to-night we are to examine bodies which sometimes spread out their fiery banners millions of miles over the sky, and threaten the stability of the system which we have been discussing. Science cannot anticipate the coming of these flaming worlds. When they have once passed under the eye of man—when a sufficient number of observations has been taken to fix their elements—then, and not till then, can man tell their course, but there are thousands and tens of thousands of these bodies revolving around the sun which have never been seen and of which nothing is yet known. Let us look at the elements requisite to determine their orbits. All the stars are bound together by the force of gravitation. To determine the movements of any we must calculate the quantity of matter in the immense orb of the sun—the mass of each one of the planets by which it may be affected, and also the mass of their numerous satellites; the intensity of the star; the quantity of the projectile force exerted upon it, and its direction.

The amount of matter in any body is determined relatively in this way. Take any substance; let it fall towards the earth. We can calculate the distance through which it falls for each moment of time. We know that if the earth were heavier the body would, of course, fall faster. Now, taking the same substance to the different planets, if it fell through the same distance in the same time we would know that every planet, where a similar result was obtained, contained an equal quantity of matter with the earth. Professor M. then referred to the mode of calculating the distance which the sun falls through towards the earth in a second of time. If the earth were the same distance from the sun as the moon is from the earth, and if it fell through the same distance towards the sun, in its revolutions around it, as the moon falls towards the earth in a given time, then the quantity of matter in the earth would be the same as in the sun; but the sun, we know, is vastly more distant from the earth than the earth is from the moon, and the rule that the force exerted by gravitation is inversely as the square of the distance, must be applied. Increasing the quantity of matter, therefore, in the sun to compensate for its greater distance, we find that it must be 354,000 times as large as the earth to exert the power over it which it really does. The question arose, Can this great law extend its sway over the comets? NEWTON, on calculating this problem, found that it resulted in a general equation involving the ellipse, parabola and hyperbola. When he had ascertained this, he asked whether he could apply it to any individual comet. At this time the wonderful comet of 1680 appeared. It came within the range of vision unexpectedly and unheralded. It plunged down from space almost perpendicularly towards the earth. The trail of light which accompanied it was many millions of miles in length, and its motion 880,000 miles in one second of time. It was finally determined that it would go to the immense distance of three thousand four hundred millions of miles from the sun before becoming visible again. Calculations made it highly probable that some record would be found of it in antiquity. Such a body was mentioned in 1106, and, tracing it still further back, another appearance was mentioned about 575 years previous to that time. At like periods still further back in time historians made mention of strange appearances in the heavens—some asserting that this body as it rushed away from human sight was the soul of CÆSAR taking its flight, and going to assert its right to a place among the gods. Now the question was, Who should investigate the motion of these bodies? A genius arose whose mind was exactly adapted to such studies. HALLEY, when returning from the Island of St. Helena—a locality since celebrated for a deed having no connection with the heavens—[applause]—saw one, and the idea seized him of calculating its motion. He found himself successful, and the body whose return he predicted was denominated Halley's Comet. Problema longe difficilimum he styled his task, and called upon posterity, justa posteritas, as he worded it, to remember, if his calculations proved true, that the computations were first made by an Englishman;—and here to-night let us give him the homage which his genius deserves. [Applause.] Other astronomers, SALANDE and EULER among them, took up his results and making the calculations for the retardation exerted by the different planets near which the comet passed, predicted its return within thirty days of its actual appearance. The only reason they made this error was because the exact weight of some of the planets was not known. Had that of Jupiter been more accurately calculated, they would have come within nineteen days of its appearance. Almost in our own time it has again returned, and at that time its position was exactly pointed out by the power of mathematical analysis. All the cometary bodies which have visited our system since it was possible to mark their motions with accuracy have been observed, and the time of the return of any one of them is known. Now look at the observations necessary to determining a comet's orbit. To-night take the telescope; fix the place of the body and the time at which it is observed; then at the end of twenty-four or forty-eight hours fix its place again, and at the end of an equal amount of time observe it again. These three observations will be all that are necessary. We must find the plane on which the body lies, and the inclination of that plane—then finding the points where its orbit cuts the plane, we have the nodes. One point in the large axis always passes through the sun's centre; the perihelion point, if calculated, gives another point in the line, and from these data we have all the elements we wish—the eccentricity of the orbit, the inclination of the orbit's plane, the time of its passing the perihelion points, and the line of the nodes.

Professor M. then discussed the constitution of comets. They are very different from planets; that we knew, but the fact that they are sometimes seen like dark spots on the sun, is no proof that they are solid bodies. They are nebulous, and we are certain that none has ever been sufficiently near us to affect the movement of the earth. At one time there was one which it was calculated should have lengthened the year by three hours had it been as large as the earth, but it was not lengthened by the fraction of a second. One was also found among Jupiter's satellites, but did not affect them appreciably. Saturn's rings furnish the most delicate test, for there is no material bond that attaches them to the planet, and had one of these bodies ever come within reach of it derangement must inevitably have ensued—but they remain as they ever have been. Now what are the flaming tails which accompany them composed of? None can tell. They fly off from the sun with a velocity greater than gravitation could impress upon them in its own direction. It seems as though the nucleus were put in a state of intense activity by the action of the sun. Professor M. spoke of the comet which was recently visible. He said he found that, very soon after it began throwing out these flames of light, they appeared to burst out from the body itself, as it neared the sun. Then they were thrown backward as if meeting a resisting medium. Then a circular envelope, beautiful and gauzy, was formed. This passed more than a semi-circumference about the head, the exterior being brightest. It expanded and grew larger, and a globe or sphere was formed outside of this, and then the elements of another exterior to that. But behind the nucleus, with reference to the sun, there was jet-like blackness. All these appearances were proofs that there was a power inside of the nucleus holding the exterior fast. Onward it moved, beautiful and graceful in appearance. The trail which followed was not constant in its brilliancy, and along the axis there was intense darkness again. Halley's comet in 1835 discovered similar traits in some points, but the observations of HERSCHEL at the Cape of Good Hope, and of STRUVE at Pulkova, display differences, some of them very striking. What power it is which projects this light at such intense velocity, and what power again absorbs it into the head from which it emanates, I cannot tell. I have no theory to present. The sun does not throw it off, for it cannot attract and at the same time repel bodies which naturally gravitate toward it. What electrical force is I do not know. Some have supposed that the rays of the sun were so influenced by striking against the body as to be deflected. The great difficulty here is that the tails of the comets occasionally are turned towards the sun. Now the question arises, Whence do these bodies come? Many will be startled when they hear me say to-night that the celebrated nebular hypothesis may, after all, be the correct one. But this theory cannot justly be wrested to the purposes for which some have attempted to use it. Suppose the great mass of matter which this theory asserts once filled space to be set revolving. If the globe which is necessarily formed cools gradually, the particles at the equator will be heaved up just enough to meet the force of gravitation—they will be held in equilibrio. A ring must be left in space, and it will separate further and further from the central orb. This ring must finally become a sphere itself with a circular orbit, or one nearly so, and then another ring in time will separate in the same way, until the sun becomes condensed so as to throw off no more bodies. I do not say positively this hypothesis is true, but I announce here to-night that the evidence in favor of it is stronger than was the evidence in favor of the law of gravitation at the time of NEWTON's death. But the question arises how comets can be formed on this theory? There will be bodies left in the interstices of these globes which will be held almost in equilibrio, until coming within the sphere of influence of some larger body, they yield to the law of gravitation, and are drawn away and sent through space with that immense velocity which characterizes the motion of the comet.

It is not necessary that the planes of their orbits, on this hypothesis, should coincide with the plane of the sun's orbit so nearly as do those of the planets. Is not this a material hypothesis? No. I hold it to be the grandest theory which has ever filled the human mind. When KEPLER conceived that the planets revolved in the circular orbits, he did not know that they did so in obedience to a fixed law. He supposed that God had commissioned angels to carry them around the sun. NEWTON advanced beyond KEPLER in revealing the laws by which God governs the universe, and discoveries as grand as those may yet remain for the future to unveil.

The next lecture of the course is to be delivered Tuesday evening.

Decisions of the Court of Appeals not Binding

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your correspondent "A Member of the Bar," expresses surprise that Mr. Justice ROOSEVELT should contemn the decision of the Court of Appeals, and that he should render his decisions on the assumption that what that learned Court have decided as law in one case they will decide not to be law in another. I regret to be obliged to confess that your correspondent does wrong to Justice ROOSEVELT. That learned Judge is just from his seat as a member of the Court of Appeals, and he decides according to his experience of the course of decision there. Stare decisis is there no longer regarded—only in June last it was there declared that a single decision of that Court cannot claim "any impunity on the ground of stare decisis." (17 New-York Reports, 533.) Judge BRONSON saw this tendency when he, as a member of that Court, exclaimed, "If we have no respect for the opinions of others, we ought at least to have some regard for our own." (4 Comstock, 385.) That Court does not respect its own decisions, how then can respect be expected of others? To prove this I will cite a few out of the very numerous instances in which that Court has overruled or departed from its own decisions: Astor vs. L'Amoreux, 4 Selden, 107, was explained in Edmonston vs. McLoud, 16 New-York Reports, 543; and again, in Griffin vs. Margaret, 17 New-York Reports, 28; Manley vs. The People, 3 Selden, 295, was explained and corrected Haskins vs. The People, 16 New-York Reports, 344; Blake vs. Ferris, 1 Selden, 48, was reviewed; Storrs vs. City of Utica, 17 New-York Reports, 104; De Witt vs. Barley, 5 Selden, 371, was corrected when it came again before the Court, 17 New-York Reports 340; Gillett vs. Moody, 3 Comstock, 479; Talmadge vs. Pell, 3 Selden, 328, and Gillett vs. Phillips, 3 Kernan, were all then partially overruled in Leavitt vs. Blatchford, 17 New-York Reports, 521; Olmstead vs. Elden, 1 Selden, 144, was overruled in October, 1858; Huff vs. Burnett, 2 Selden, 337, conflicts with Halsey vs. Tinsebaugh, 15 New-York Reports, 467; Chegary vs. Jenkins, 1 Selden, 376, was overruled in Chegary vs. Mayor of New-York, 3 Kernan, 220-231; Rundolph vs. Thalbeimer, 2 Kernan, 593, was overruled and ridiculed, September, 1858. My list is not exhausted, but perhaps I have shown enough to establish my position.

As the decisions of the Court of Appeals are not to be regarded as evidence of the law, where shall we look for the law? Pray inform a

Sandy Hook and the Quarantine.

NEW-JERSEY SMELLS AN UNCOMMONLY LARGE RAT

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

TRENTON, Wednesday, Jan. 19, 1859.

A new and rather ingenious device to secure the removal of the Quarantine to Sandy Hook, by the action of Congress, has just come to light. The attention of the Legislature was called to it this morning, by Senator CAMPBELL, of Somerset County, who presented a communication he had just received from Mr. THOMSON, of the United States Senate. It inclosed a copy of a bill recently introduced to the United States Senate by Mr. SEWARD, a section of which appeared in the Daily this afternoon. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the property belonging to the United States, at Castleton, Staten Island, now occupied by the officers attached to the New-York Collectorship, (Quarantine,) and "to erect buildings for revenue stations on any other land in or conveniently near the harbor of New-York, belonging to the United States and now unoccupied, or which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, can be properly used for this purpose!" etc. All former laws inconsistent with this act are also to be repealed.

It is evident that this bill of Mr. SEWARD's has covertly in view the occupation of Sandy Hook for a Quarantine Station, and our Senator THOMSON very properly proposes to offer an amendment, providing that "the act shall not be construed as authorizing the establishment of a Quarantine Station without the consent of the State in which such station shall be located."

This is a most important amendment, and our Legislature will doubtless ask our Representatives in Congress to use their influence to have it adopted. I believe that some years ago our State ceded to the General Government the use of Sandy Hook for military purposes, without the slightest idea that the place would be converted to any other use; and whatever may be the strict construction of the law on the subject, there is no doubt that it would be a breach of good faith, and a violation of the spirit of the conveyance, if the general Government should appropriate the place for a Quarantine, or indeed for any other purpose not contemplated at the time we made them the grant, or without the consent of our State.

This appears to be the latest effort of the New-York schemers to defeat the wishes of the people of New-Jersey, and obtain by a covert trick what they could not secure by more open and honorable means. Their papers and people have counted upon the venality or weakness of Jerseymen too long; they have successfully failed in all previous efforts, and, having found that we could not be flattered, bribed nor intimidated into a concession to their wishes, they will now find that they are equally mistaken in supposing that we are so stupid as to permit this trick to pass without detection and firm resistance.

Successful Trial-trip of the Winans' Steamer.

From the Baltimore Sun, Jan. 21.

The iron steamer, built by the Messrs. WINANS, (the last novelty afloat since the Leviathan,) went upon a trial-trip, from the yard of the builders, at the Ferry Bar, to the North Point light house and back. About 9½ o'clock steam was began to be raised, and at near 11 o'clock the steamer turned gracefully from her moorings and was headed down the Patapsco. With a pressure of 56 pounds of steam (half her capacity) a satisfactory headway was made. The points of the bow and stern barely touched the water, and the even progress of the vessel caused no commotion of the waves, but left a smooth wake like a groove. The steamer passed Fort Carroll until off North Point, when she was put about. On the return, and when opposite Fort McHenry, the steamer was greeted with a salute of six guns from the fort, and in recognition of the compliment the steamers' flags were displayed and the steam whistle blown.

The steamer, both going and returning, was greeted by the crews of all the craft in the river with cheers, waving of hats, and other demonstrations of a like nature. Besides the officers of the vessel, Captain VAUGHAN, Engineer DAVID FRAZIER, and a number of workmen, there were on board THOMAS WINANS and ROSS WINANS, Esqs., and their ladies. The steamer returned about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and after playing about the open water, was returned to her moorings at the yard of the builders. The average speed attained was about 12 miles an hour. The ventilation below decks was perfectly preserved during the running of the machinery, and at no time did the thermometer rise above 65° Fahrenheit. We believe the builders regard the trial as satisfactory, and a guarantee of success when a greater distance is attempted.

LAUNCH OF A SLOOP-OF-WAR.—The Philadelphia Ledger thus notices the launch, at their Navy-yard, on Thursday last, of the first new sloop-of-war:

"Sloop-of-war No. 1 was launched from the lower ship-house at the Navy-yard at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in the presence of an immense concourse of persons. The launch was a very beautiful one, and was not attended with any accident. Miss MARY FLORIDA GRICE, daughter of the constructor, performed the christening, calling the vessel 'Sloop No. 1,' as there has not yet been a name given to her. It is intended to place her in the dry-dock at once for coppering. This vessel is one of eight provided for by an act of the last Congress. Six being built in the places designated—New-York, Boston, Portsmouth, Norfolk, Pensacola and San Francisco. All are to be propellers, but in the one in course of construction at San Francisco, Sloop No. 1 is the first off the stocks. She was commenced about the middle of September, and was ready for launching by Christmas, but the weather delayed it. Her length is 208 feet, beam 33 feet 2 inches, depth of hold 14 feet. She is 1,200 tons burthen, and will draw about 8 feet water. Her model indicates speed, her bow being rather of the clipper build. The engines, which are being made at the foundry of Messrs. MERRICK & Son, are to be of 1,000 horse power, as large as those of the Lancaster. By the terms of the contract, they are to be completed within three months from the day of launching. This sloop will carry two 11 inch pivot guns, each gun, with its carriage, weighing 25,000 pounds, and two 32-pounders. The weight of each of these guns is 5,700 pounds. Mr. GRICE made the drawings for the vessel, and Mr. HOOVER superintended her construction. She is built entirely of white oak, and is most substantially constructed. Altogether she is creditable to Philadelphia skill.

TRIAL OF MICHAEL FINN FOR MURDER IN COOK COUNTY, ILL.—The trial of MICHAEL FINN for the murder of NATHANIEL VIAL, in the town of Cicero, a few miles out of Chicago, on the 2d of June last, terminated several days ago. The prosecution was conducted by DANIEL MCELROY, Esq., and District-Attorney HAVEN, and is said to have been managed with much ability. The Jury at first were unable to agree, as the statutes of Illinois recognize no intermediate offence between simple manslaughter and murder. Eventually a conviction was obtained for the former.

GENESEE VALLEY RAILROAD.—The iron is laid on the track from AVON to Mount Morris, thus completing railway communication between the latter place and Rochester.

DYSPEPSIA—WHAT IS IT? HOW CURED.

DYSPEPSIA is our national disease—weak stomach, feeble digestion, distress after eating, costive habit, bilious condition. How many suffer with it, and its attendant symptoms of low spirits, bad taste, coated tongue, obstupified head, and attacks of headache! Yet, how few know how to cure it! Generally, because the bowels are constipated, resort is had to cathartics or laxatives. But such a condition was never cured by cathartics, whose only office is to weaken the digestion, and impair the integrity of the entire assimilative system.

But HUMPHREYS' HOMŒOPATHIC DYSPEPSIA PILLS—a simple medicated sugar-pill—have cured hundreds of the worst and most obstinate cases. This is done simply by improving the tone and restoring the integrity of the digestive organs, from which result good appetite, regular habits, a clear head and buoyant spirits. Such a medicine is a gem, and only requires to be known to be appreciated.

Price, 25 cents per box, with directions. Six boxes, $1.

N. B.—A full set of HUMPHREY'S HOMŒOPATHIC SPECIFICS, with book of directions, and twenty different remedies, in large vials, morocco case, $5: do. in plain case, $4; family case of 15 boxes and book, $2.

WORTH KNOWING.—Prolapsus Uteri in its simpler forms can sometimes be cured by one visit. The more aggravated cases of this and kindred diseases are soon brought under control by Motorpathy—a system of therapeutics now known to be reliable. We have on register hundreds of names to living witnesses of cures, where patients were brought on beds after lying for years helpless. This treatment, with other auxiliaries used in the Institution, gives vitality and force to the functional powers of all the organs, increasing the mental powers and constitutional strength. In short, it makes the enfeebled and delicate into healthy and vigorous men and women. It obviates spinal weakness and irritation, in which many organic difficulties originate; and takes a firm curative hold on most chronic diseases. Cold weather is favorable for a more speedy recovery. Institution open Summer and Winter. Visits are occasionally made. Circulars sent gratis. Treatise on Motorpathy 25 cents. Address H. HALSTED, M. D., Round Hill Water Cure, Northampton, Mass.

NOTE.—Dr. HALSTED will be in New-York (at the St. Nicholas Hotel) Tuesday and Wednesday each week, during Winter, to treat such as cannot go to the Institution. Calls received from 10 to 3, and from 6 to 7 P. M.

FRIDAY, Jan. 21—P. M.

The Stock Exchange somewhat sympathized with the weather to-day. In the phrase of the Street, when prices incline downward, it was "softer" than yesterday. The decline was ½ ₱ cent. on New-York Central, 1@1½ ₱ cent. on Reading, 1½ on Pacific Mail, and ⅛@¼ ₱ cent. on the Western Roads. The State list and the Railway Bonds were generally steady at Thursday's prices. Virginias rose ¼ ₱ cent., selling at 97, ex dividend. At the early Board the dealings in New-York Central seemed to be at a dead lock; scarcely a share of cash stock sold, the bid being 84⅜ ₱ cent. In Reading, however, and in Pacific Mail, the sellers were unusually urgent, and sales were pressed in both cases, particularly on sellers' option. On the other hand, Pennsylvania Coal and Harlem Preferred were firmer and in good request; and Erie, though a fraction below the top bid of yesterday afternoon, was in demand at 14¼@¼. We understand that the arrangement for the completion of the Long Dock Improvement, for which the Erie Company are under large advances and responsibilities, without deriving in its unfinished state any profit from it, is nearly ready for public announcement. The money is to be advanced on mortgage by a party of private capitalists in this City, at 90 cents on the dollar, to the extent of $500,000, under a new contract for finishing the work by the 1st of December next. In part consideration of this negotiation, the Long Dock Company, it is said, have agreed to sell, out and out, to the same parties, a portion of their lots on the water front. At the afternoon Board the short sellers had the advantage more decidedly than for several days past, and sold Reading and Galena with considerable freedom at the decline of the morning, buyer's option, and at even lower prices, cash and seller's option. Reading closed 49¼ and Galena 71. The sales of Central were nearly uniform at 84½ ₱ cent., though finally offered 84⅜, seller 15 days, which is tantamount to carrying over the delivery of the Stock to the last of February, when the transfers, which close about 31st inst. for the dividend, will reopen. Pacific Mail was sold down to 86½ ₱ cent. The rumors of competition are somewhat varied to-day from the old surmise that VANDERBILT is to jockey his ally, from whom and the United States Company he has a subvention of $672,000 a year, to an English line of propellers on the Pacific (to be arranged through parties here and at San Francisco,) to carry freight and passengers between San Francisco and Panama. If this be all, we do not see in the fact, come when it may, that the old Mail Company and their thirteen steamers are necessarily to be obliterated, or to have their dividends wholly struck down. If such be the feeling of the actual shareholders, they have made a most unreasonable mistake heretofore in supposing that a single concern is always to have the monopoly of the Pacific steam trade, or that a Company of their strength can only exist by monopoly. The whole story, however, may turn out like the Vanderbilt surmise. The market finally closed with some heavy bids for Central at 84⅛; Reading, 49¼@⅜; Galena, 71; Rock Island, 59¾@60; Missouris, 86½.

The rain storm and the fact that no regular mail steamer sails to-morrow, made business dull at the Banking-houses and on the Merchants' Exchange to-day. Money is easier than quoted yesterday on prime short acce
